Crash Victim Dies

A two-car crash on Patricia Bay Highway at 2:40 p.m., Saturday claimed the life of an Oak Bay woman.

Dead is Mrs. Sarah Forryan, 83, who was a passenger in a car driven by her husband, Cyril, 84, when it was involved in the crash at Patricia Bay Highway and Sayward Road.

Driver of the second car was Clifford Allan, 23, of 6858 Veyness.

Saanich police said the Forryans, who live at 2110 Windsor, were travelling north on the highway and were trying to make a left turn off the highway into a service station.

Mr. Allan's car collided with the Forryans' car, hitting the front right fender and door. "He didn't have a chance to stop," witnesses told police.

DEAD ON ARRIVAL

All three persons involved were rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where Mrs. Forryan was pronounced dead on arrival. Her husband suffered head injuries and severe shock and was in "fair" condition Saturday night. Mr. Allan was treated for minor facial injuries and released.

Croner D. G. Ashby has ordered a post mortem.

Bobby's Finest Hour

By BILL STAYDAL
Bobby is a lot of dog. The boisterous 10-year-old springer spaniel once rescued two little girls who had drifted on a log into a lake in the B.C. Interior. He towed them to shore, log and all.

In 1959 Bobby gained fleeting notoriety by shaking his soaking pelt all over Prince Phillip's immaculate trousers. Now Bobby's a hero to the nine residents of Gooch Island, near Sidney, after a stormy marine rescue which only the stout-hearted water dog could perform.

The brown and white spaniel belongs to Mr. and Mrs. Otto Miser, caretakers on Gooch Island. By force of personality he has become practically a member of the household of the Clarence D. Martin Jr. family of Los Angeles, owners of Gooch Island and its handsome lodge. Mr. Martin is a car dealer, realtor and wheat farmer. During the Kennedy administration he was United States undersecretary of commerce in charge of transportation.

In 1959 he bought mile-long Gooch Island, seven miles east of Sidney, and since then he and his attractive wife Charlotte have spent summers there with their children: Diana, 13, Cary 10, and Brad, nine. Mr. Martin commutes by air to Los Angeles at intervals, and so was away June 28 when Bobby's finest hour arrived.

Piloted by Mr. Miser aboard the 34-foot cruiser Miss Diana, Mrs. Martin set off in a storm to get the week's groceries. She took son Brad with her and Yan Ying Chow, wife of the family's cook.

"The wind was blowing at about 30 miles an hour and the waves were running," she recalls.

They had just backed away from the dock when Mr. Miser, reaching to change gear, bumped the rusty ignition key. It snapped, turning off the engine at the same time.

Buffered by the south-wester, Miss Diana drifted toward the reefs and rocks of nearby Comet Island. Mr. Miser managed to drop anchor before the cruiser grounded, but the four were trapped in the near-gale.

Ashore, witness to their plight but unable to help, were Mrs. Miser, Mr. Chow, Diana and Cary. None could row well enough to chance the storm with a spare key and tools.

But there was Bobby. The idea occurred to everyone at the same time. The people on shore fixed a key and a pair of pliers to Bobby's collar. Someone threw a stick into the sea and Bobby automatically charged after it.

When Bobby reached the stick Mr. Miser began coaxing him toward the German so he wouldn't return to shore. Shaggy legs churning and muzzle held high, Bobby kept coming through the waves and entangling kelp.

They hauled their rescuer aboard, got the engine going in a moment and made the journey to Sidney.

All except Bobby. He swam back to shore.

Three Alps Cable Cars Fall Eighteen Tourists Injured

CHAMONIX, France (UPI) — Three cable gondola cars crowded with tourists jolted off a guide cable Saturday and plunged more than 100 feet onto the snow-covered floor of a two-mile-high valley in the shadow of Europe's loftiest mountain.

At least 18 persons — some of them children — were injured. Reports from hospitals in Chamonix, a resort town 9,000 feet below the rugged "White Valley," said 14 of the tourists were injured seriously. Four others were treated for minor injuries.

The accident left another 80 tourists dangling in 40 other small cable cars in the shadow of the majestic 15,781-foot Mont Blanc. The cars were cautiously winched back to the terminal stations after swinging for hours as high as 500 feet above the valley floor.

It was believed part of a support pylon failed and fell into the valley, dragging down with it the cars travelling between the pylon and the terminal station.

Five years ago, a French air force jet fighter on a training mission clipped the cable in the valley, plunging three cars to the ground. Six persons were killed and many others were stranded in other cars.

Last Christmas, 17 skiers were hurled from a cable car in central France when it made an emergency stop. Seven of them were killed and ten others seriously injured.

Villagers Shield Red Oil

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reports that the North Vietnamese are dispersing their oil stocks into the middle of villages could present the United States with a painful decision.

The evident objective of the North Vietnamese is to use the populations of those villages as a shield against American bombings.

U.S. policy since the beginning of the air war 17 months ago has been to avoid inflicting civilian casualties while hitting at military targets in North Viet Nam.

Sources here said Saturday Robert McNamara was told during a Honolulu military conference that North Vietnamese oil stocks are being dispersed.

The sources familiar with what was discussed at the Honolulu conference said the oil is being placed in above-ground and below-ground storage drums in scattered villages.

There is no estimate available of the percentage of North Viet Nam's oil being so dispersed.

McNamara returned Saturday from his Honolulu conference at Pacific Command Headquarters where he got a briefing from Admiral U.S. Grant Sharp, U.S. military chief in the Pacific.

Speaking to reporters at

Andrew Air Force Base, McNamara said the U.S. forces in Viet Nam in recent weeks have been able to deny the North Vietnamese soldiers and their Viet Cong allies the opportunity to assemble forces in sufficient size to mount a monsoon offensive.

Sources said he was referring here to "spoiling operations" by fast-moving American troop formations.

Moscow Protests to U.S.

'Bombs Endanger Russian Lives'

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union Saturday protested U.S. air raids near the North Vietnamese port of Haiphong and said they endangered Russian shipping and lives. The United States promptly branded the protest unnecessary.

U.S. Secretary of State Dean Rusk said he doubted the Soviet protest would cause the United States to stop the raids.

The Kremlin protest came in a note handed to the U.S. Embassy in Moscow. It said the attacks of last Thursday "created a direct threat to Soviet merchant ships and the lives of Soviet seamen." It added:

SAY U.S. RESPONSIBLE

"The responsibility for the possible consequences of such actions fully rests with the United States government."

As is customary in such notes, the Soviet Foreign Ministry did not elaborate.

Speaking to reporters in Washington, Rusk said he had not seen the text of the note. "But our planes have been hitting the exact targets they aimed at, the oil targets."

Noting that Russia, along with Britain is co-chairman of the Geneva agreements on peace in Indochina but has refused to reconvene the interested powers, Rusk said:

RUSK SAYS UNNECESSARY

"It's not necessary for this kind of question to arise if they would meet their duties under the agreements. All that kind of talk from the Soviet Union is unnecessary."

Officials at the U.S. Defense Department said last Thursday that there were no ships close to the Haiphong depot when U.S. planes struck. They said three freighters were seen in the outer harbor but their nationality was not determined. Although the attack that day centered on remnants of the Haiphong oil depot wrecked June 29, the Soviet note referred to the raid as an attack on the port of Haiphong itself.

BULLETS MISS SHIPS

The note said, "Fragments and machine gun fire fell in close proximity to the Soviet merchant ships Kuibyshev, Sovetsk and Usting."

"Four hours later planes dropped a number of big metal objects around the motorship Koromol lying at anchor in the Malong Bay," it added. "The objects were not further identified in the Soviet note. Conceivably, they could have been jettisoned fuel tanks from the U.S. aircraft."

Propaganda Chief Ousted

TOKYO (AP) — Communist China disclosed today the ouster of propaganda chief Lu Ting-i, the second - highest-ranking victim of the current purge.

Lu, 62, was replaced as head of the propaganda department of the Communist party's Central Committee, the official New China News Agency said.

It did not say whether he also lost his other jobs as culture minister and one of China's 16 vice-premiers, but observers said he was expected to lose these posts as well.

Namu Dives to Death

SEATTLE (AP) — Namu, the world-famous killer whale, died Saturday night when he apparently drowned after becoming entangled in a net at his pen on the waterfront.

Ted Griffin, owner of the 20-foot show animal — the first killer whale to be kept alive for anytime in captivity — said Namu apparently drowned when he dove under a float on his pen and got caught in a perimeter net.

"He hadn't eaten for a day," Griffin said, "and for a week or so his performances haven't been in the proper style, so maybe he was trying to escape. "His appearance was good, though, and his health seemed to be all right."

Namu swam into the nets of some fishermen a year ago off the coastal town of Namu, B.C. He was later sold to Griffin, who operates a marine aquarium here.

Following his capture near the town from whence he got his name, Namu was brought to Seattle in a floating pen. His long trip down the coast brought the flotilla widespread attention.

Griffin installed the four-ton whale in a pen on the Seattle waterfront where it became one of the city's most popular attractions.

But Griffin felt he was lonely and sought to find a mate for Namu.

One small female was captured and named Shamu, but Griffin decided she was too small and she was sold to a San Diego marine attraction.

Further attempts at obtaining a mate or a male companion for Namu ended in failure.

While here and at his winter home across Puget Sound, Namu was the object of studies by scientists, who recorded his blood pressure and pulse rate. Namu and his owner became such friends that Griffin often rode the whale and swam in the same pool with him.

Griffin said Saturday night he hadn't decided whether to try to obtain another whale, Diana Martin, Bobby and Mrs. Martin in calmer waters.

Folk Music Featured At Holiday Bash

By BERT BIRN

Performers from Toronto, Vancouver and Victoria contributed their talents to the Summer Holiday Bash in Centennial Square Saturday night.

But no matter how wide-spread their points of origin, their entertainment medium was largely the same: modern folk music.

OPEN PROGRAM

From Toronto, but now appearing at Jon York's Music Hall, were Lee and Sean Richards who opened the program. Also from the Music Hall were the Gibson Brothers who, with drummer Scotty Miller, provide what is, apparently, termed country blues. The trio, hails from Vancouver and the brothers are Roger, Jerome and Willy.

Port Angeles Needs Crews

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) — The port of Port Angeles could use twice as many long-shoremen gangs as are now available, says James Norton of Local 27, International Longshoremen's Union. A heavy increase in log exports to Japan has accounted for the demand for crews to work the ships, he said.

Loudspeaker Battler Pauses for Removal

The one-man campaign to stop loudspeaker music on the 700 block Yates ceased Saturday as the lone packeter withdrew with his placard.

"I'm hoping that I have registered sufficient disapproval against the speakers that the people responsible for them will remove them on their own volition," said W. G. Smith, 937 Balmoral.

"If they are not removed then I intend to take further action," he added.

The 61-year-old retired contractor declined to say what further action he planned.

Mr. Smith became angry last week when the piped music was turned on beneath the canopy on the south side of Yates, and began picketing in protest.

"I regard the speakers as a serious invasion of my rights as a citizen," he said.

Mr. Smith explained that he is not against music, but he is defending his right to be able to choose the time and place he would like to hear it.

"The only way I could possibly not hear the music, if I walked under the canopy, would be to wear ear plugs, and this I refuse to do," he said.

Mr. Smith said that since his campaign was launched he has received many telephone calls from people congratulating him on his stand in defence of what he believes to be an inalienable right of a free man — to listen or not listen to music if he chooses.

"Whittled Away"

"This is only a small thing, but our rights are constantly being whittled away, and if somebody doesn't step out and complain, we'll eventually lose them all," he said.

"Once a precedent has been established it is extremely difficult to have the situation reversed."

"I certainly don't look forward to making a spectacle of myself on the street, but I'm not going to sit idly by and watch my rights gradually be gobbled up by commercialism without making an effort to do something about it."

'Drunks' Day' Marked By Court

It was "drunks' day" at central magistrate's court Saturday when 14 people appeared charged with being intoxicated in a public place.

All but one pleaded guilty and most were fined $15 or three days in jail.

A resident of Victoria for 20 years, Dr. Thomas B. Williams, 81, died Thursday in Richmond Heights Private Hospital.

Dr. Williams was well-known in Victoria as past president of the Victoria Round Table, and an associate member of the Victoria branch of the Canadian Authors' Association.

Formerly of Calgary, Dr. Williams made his home at 3640 Elliston.

He was a graduate of Queen's University, Kingston, and the University of Wisconsin. A specialist in mining engineering and petroleum geology, he came to Victoria in 1946 as controller for the B.C. department of coal, petroleum and natural gas.

He was a life member of the Alberta Society of Petroleum Geologists, life member of the Professional Engineers of B.C. and of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy.

U.S. Purchases Fighter Planes

WASHINGTON (AP) — An initial purchase of about 50 F-5 Freedom Fighter planes for use in Viet Nam has been authorized by the United States defence department, informants here say. The total is classified and subject to change, depending on the pattern of need that develops.

Major discussion at the Honolulu conference revolved around logistical and support requirements of present and future operations.

Small Electrical Shocks Never Medically Harmful

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: We've been searching for the right source: Carpet expert? Electrician? Doctor?

What causes electric shocks when walking on nylon carpeting? What can be done to prevent them? All members of our family, except one, experience these shocks. We can't turn on a light, touch the wall, which has metal laths under the plaster, open a window (metal frames) or dial the phone without a shock.

This has become such a problem that we are ready to give up the carpeting. (Can you help?—MRS. C.T.)

It's not strictly a medical question, but what happens in this: Friction between two dry insulated surfaces (in this case your shoes and the carpet) builds up charges of static electricity. At the first opportunity these charges will escape to the ground — and the metal in your house or apartment is connected to the ground. That's when you get the shock and a small spark.

Your Good Health

Medically it is harmless, but it is startling and annoying.

What is needed is some way for these static electricity charges to leak off gradually instead of building up. You've seen gasoline trucks with a piece of chain or metal ribbon dragging on the ground. This is to let such charges leak off of the ground instead of building up to make a spark that might ignite the truck's cargo of gas.

INFLAMMABLE

For years now, operating rooms in hospitals have been equipped with "conductive" floors, that is, floors which will carry electric charges off to the ground and prevent sparks. (Some anaesthetics are highly inflammable.) Nurses and doctors are instructed to never wear nylon slippers or underwear. Nylon is an insulator, hence with friction can build up static charges. Cotton, however, which absorbs a bit of moisture becomes a conductor instead of an insulator — so charges leak away as fast as they build up. Result: No sparks or shocks.

A carpet manufacturer told me that for several years rug and carpet cleaning establishments have used a spray which prevents nylon and other synthetic fibres from building up static. It takes the shock out of carpet.

UNKNOWN

In checking around, I discovered that this spray is still completely unknown in some carpeting stores, and that some cleaners don't seem to know about it, either. One simple temporary spray I have found effective is a weak solution of a household detergent in water. Applied as a fine spray to the carpet, this is effective for several days.

You may have noticed that when you walk barefoot, you don't get these shocks. There's enough moisture on the feet to let the static drain off. Footwear, which, for any reason, conducts electricity would do the same. In warm, moist weather there is less trouble.

Fixed Holidays

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS is set for a two-month summer recess, returning in early September—and then, it is suggested, perhaps taking another recess to allow for important fall conferences which will require the attention of key governmental figures.

There will be many Canadians who harbor strong doubts that the $18,000-a-year members of Parliament deserve or are entitled to so much holiday, especially when there is important legislation waiting to be enacted; when the rate of absenteeism from the Commons indicates that not a few members are taking unofficial rests between vacations, and when it is now possible for the MPs to fly home frequently at weekends to take care of constituency or personal business.

But it must be granted that the hot Ottawa summer does not provide the best of parliamentary working conditions, and also that having the House constantly sitting would have a deleterious effect on the administrative side of government activities.

This latter point is one taken into consideration by the Montreal Gazette in suggesting that the parliamentary recesses at Christmas, Easter and in the summer should be fixed by statute, rather than negotiated by the government and the Opposition.

If the recesses were established by law, The Gazette argues, members would be able to plan better, cabinet ministers would be assured of time to concentrate on their increasing administrative loads, and the holidays would cease to be used as a means of bargaining over legislation with each side in a position to threaten the other with prolonging the sessions.

One can imagine that there would still be manoeuvring by government and Opposition alike to cast each other in an unfavorable political light in regard to the progress of legislation before the adjournment dates; there would still be some room for bargaining.

But uncertainty about getting much or any time off at Christmas, Easter and in the summer would cease to be a reason or excuse for absenteeism during the sittings, and an assured respite from parliamentary battling indeed should work to the benefit of the ministers' departmental business.

'Old England'

VICTORIANS will have received somewhat of a shock when reading that the vice-president of the International Union of Architects describes Vancouver as "a bit of old England." This analogy has hitherto been applied by tourist promoters to our city.

One is forced to assume that he sees things in a guise much different from the ordinary gaze. The comparison with an English town is certainly not obvious. The ugly poles that carry wires which spoil the scene are not duplicated in the cities of Shakespeare's sceptred isle, for one thing. For another, the general North American pattern of houses, shops and buildings is not equated there.

Looking at the architectural skyline of Vancouver from aboard a ship entering Burrard Inlet in fact, it could with much more aptitude be likened to New York's Manhattan silhouette. And certainly east an eye at the North Shore from the precincts of Stanley Park the view is not one that is equivalent to England's scenic vistas.

This so frequently applied "Old England" business is largely a myth. Once it could be related to the people and atmosphere of the B.C. coast but in physical city resemblance the appellation was a misnomer.

One could liken a particular square perhaps, a single residential street, an odd corner, a fleeting impression of a tiny segment, and see it as a reminder of an English town—but that is all. And this could probably be the case with any one of many New World cities.

The day seems in prospect however when the architect in question may become right. Practically the whole urban world is high-rising in similar structures, in architectural styles that have one thing in common—their sameness. Given the likely perpetuation of this modern development Vancouver may indeed become as a "bit" of some English town. But it will also then be a bit of a thousand others of other lands.

The Aphid Hunters

WORD of the spreading infestation of the balsam fir forests of B.C. by the woolly aphid means that a timber crop estimated at 260 billion board feet, or 12 per cent of the total marketable stand, is threatened with destruction over the years. Just how long it would take this scourge to kill the balsam forests depends on the rapidity with which it spreads. But there is no known cure for the disease which foresters call a cancer in the woods.

This, then, is a permanent affliction against which all the resources of government and industry must be marshalled: first, to attempt to isolate it; secondly, to try to salvage timber where the infestation has not yet killed the trees; and finally, to find a means of combatting it.

What can the general public do? Nothing. Nothing in this area, in any event; because the infestation already is established in the Victoria and southern Vancouver Island regions, and has been for some years.

Although nurserymen have destroyed their stocks, people who may have ornamental balsams on their property might as well keep them, the scientists say, because even if they do host the woolly aphids the infestation is so widespread they would add nothing to the hazard.

It is possible to spray individual trees to protect them; but it is apparently quite impossible to control the disease by such methods in the forests.

However, there is one thing the public must not do, forestry people warn. It is against the law to transport balsam of any variety from one part of the province to another. One diseased sapling from this infested area, for example, planted in Kelowna, might conceivably spread the woolly aphids to timber not yet affected.

If by chance some traveller should spot the white wool evidence on the bark of a balsam, the invariable symptom, he should report it to the nearest forest service office or to the Dominion laboratory here.

But the public can help best by remembering that it is illegal to transport the balsam species, and leave the hunting to the professional aphid hunters.

Thinking Aloud

"... of shoes, and ships, and sealing was..."
By TOM TAYLOR

IN HER "little world" Sheila Graham says the Beatles can now walk safely in their homeland. Nobody bothers them. Their fad is passing. Maybe so but copy-cat groups still command the airwaves. The "beat" keeps resounding from tribal drums. Accompanied with long hair. Longer than ever dreamed. The Beatles who set this style. And overflowing into the streets. One thing about the Merseyfads, they never looked raffish. That's mostly the chief impression of youthful lanky locks, male and female. They seem badly in need of a good wash. Things could be worse I suppose. Fancy if the Beatles had adopted the Yul Brynner hairdo. No hair at all. And if bald heads were the prevailing mode among those who get "with" each fad as it arrives, there is always a compensation, you see. Pity the poor barbers these days, though. They've lost a lot of customers.

You have to hand it to Lady. She is ingenious and can turn a demerol into an asset. Or the men—such is the paradox—who rule her fashion world. Anyway, word comes from Paris that the freckle is "in." It is the hallmark of the "beautiful non-beauty." And she is the latest rage over there. And soon will be here too, no doubt. Beauty is presumed only to be skin deep, but the girls didn't go along with this idea. They covered up the freckles. Actually a freckled face can be cute if not chic. But for long it has been considered a drawback to feminine allure. Not now though. If a girl hasn't got a single freckle, she's out of style. So she's going to have some. More than one, I expect. For the cosmetic trade can put beauty spots on as well as hide them. Mildly certainly is a corker; she sure rings the changes.

The male doesn't escape the fashion trends either. The status quo of his attire has been crumbling for the past decade. Take a pants, for instance. They've shrunk in both width and length. To be right in the swing, a go-goer, a man should put on his trousers with a shoehorn. How the young manage it is a mystery. And now it's ties. The narrow style is out and the wide one is in. The latter was a hit once before, but these things come in cycles. Like the feminine hem that goes up one year and down the next. Not long ago too colored male shirts gave way to white shirts. You were an odd ball if you lagged behind. And now the colored ones are back as the up-to-the-minute symbol. Happily yours truly has shirts and ties of both fancies. And so he'll probably be in style one day and out of it the next. No matter.

Another item on the sartorial theme. Military this time. The defence department remains in a dither about the name and dress to be given the integrated three-in-one serviceman. It's a poser on both counts. A note from Ottawa says the forces will be called Royal Canadian Marines and clad in green. Mr. Heilger keeps his own counsel. Maybe he knows he has backed himself into a corner hard to get out of. But he has said one thing. The Highland units of the country will keep the kilt. Ye gods! Just imagine a kilted Marine. This would be enough to cause a piper to burst his bagpipe with one mighty blow! I'm almost beginning to feel sorry for the defence minister; although it's all his own fault.

Commons Galleries Have Their Favorites And Even, Impolitely, Shout Their Approval

By RICHARD JACKSON, Colonist Ottawa Bureau

SO, apart from the obvious, such public and publicized frontbenches as Conservative Leader Diefenbaker, Prime Minister Pearson and External Affairs Minister Martin, who have been the oratorical bright lights of this first session of the 27th Parliament?

No use asking the professional politician-watchers in the press gallery, or in the official gallery where perch the bureaucrats to watch the play and study the performance on the Commons floor below.

Much better, as the session wore through late winter to spring and finally to summer, to hear what the paying public had to say.

Matter of fact, it might have done some of the parliamentarians good to have sat among the taxpayers in the galleries and heard some of the candid comments.

Ego-shedding, some of them. Ego-swelling, others. For while the spectators are supposed to sit in silence, who amid the tumult and the shouting of the opening daily question period, could be sure who was doing the heckling, or the cheering?

Border Still Closed

By ROLAND HUNTFOOT from KIRKENES, NORTH NORWAY

NORWAY and Russia have a common border that starts at the Arctic coast and, after meandering for 150 miles over desolate frontier, ends at the Finnish frontier. It is the edge of Siberia, and perhaps that explains the severity with which the Russians have guarded it, long after relaxation has become apparent elsewhere.

For long, there has been but one border crossing post. Last year, however, the Russians opened a second at a place called Borek Gled. It was a restricted crossing, reserved for Scandinavians, and giving access to a strictly limited slice of Soviet territory. Its chief purpose was to sell cheap spirits to thirsty locals.

The Norwegians insisted on its closure after an American tourist, Newcombe Mott, was arrested by Soviet border guards for alleged illegal border crossing, and later died in Russian captivity under mysterious circumstances.

At present, border arrangements are more or less the same as they have been for 20 years. The one post near Kirkenes serves almost exclusively for official delegations to or from Murmansk, the nearest city on the Russian side of the border. The Norwegians would like nothing better than a genuine opening of the frontier, especially for transit to Finland, but the Russians have so far refused all co-operation and keep their territory closed.

Geographically, Kirkenes and the surrounding countryside is an enclave contained by Russian and Finnish territory. Kirkenes, a small port geared to trans-shipment, has its natural hinterland in North Finland.

It could also have something to do with the NATO question. Norway is in NATO, Finland is not. The Russians are extremely sensitive to the NATO engagement in northern Scandinavia, and perhaps they are keeping the transit question as one of the little points of pressure in persuading the Norwegians to leave the organization.

Each of these steps would acknowledge defeat of his current policies.

Mr. Wilson's success in delaying his inevitable confrontation with his fellow prime ministers at the conference is likely to cause bad feeling in Britain as well as overseas. The charge that Britain's dialogue with the Rhodesian white minority is a first step towards recognizing it as the legitimate political master of the country is gaining credence even among Mr. Wilson's own supporters.

The talks, which opened early in May, are carried on by senior British and Rhodesian civil servants, seeking a field of agreement on which official discussions could be based between the two administrations. The British press calls the proceedings "talks about talks."

One of the most coherent spokesmen for Mr. Wilson's British critics is Jeremy Thorpe, a Liberal MP, who has recently returned from a tour of the colony. He would like to utilize the UN's resources to avert massacre in Rhodesia.

The "talks about talks," he asserts, will not solve Britain's problems in Central Africa; they have lasted so long because each side had expected the other to make concessions. Neither has. And the discussions, as he puts it, have been reduced to a "farce."

Mr. Wilson is likely to hear stronger words yet in September.

Daylight Saving Opposed

From Colonist Files

FARMERS were opposed to the daylight saving time introduced throughout British Columbia as a wartime measure, 25 years ago.

A group of 30 of them at Chilliwack decided to petition the provincial government for exemption of agricultural areas on the grounds that they were losing two hours a day:

"The farmers claimed that by milking their cows an hour earlier in the morning under daylight saving time, they are forced to spend an hour in idleness because heavy dew in the fields prevents work there. Further, they claim they must return to milk their cows an hour earlier in the afternoon."

The Malahat section of the Island Highway was closed off "for a period of possibly six weeks" for road improvements. Motorists were obliged to detour by the Mill Bay Ferry or the Shawinigan cutoff.

Arrangements were being made, 25 years ago, for a flower and country fair July 22 on the Oak Bay Golf Links, "to which Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and Princess Patricia have promised their patronage."

Under the auspices of the Oak Bay Red Cross Society, the fair was to include as one of its most interesting features, "My-tense Odds and Ends by a troupe of eminent artists."

"This function will have a double object, as it will help to augment the funds of this splendid society, and will also savor of the nature of a farewell to the royal visitors, as it will be their last visit to Victoria, during their residence in Canada."

The Women's Realm column suggested that schools could be made more attractive:

"The ugliness of school buildings in most of our Canadian cities is a source of surprise. We have pretty homes and beautiful churches, but schoolhouses, as a rule, are bare prison-like structures, where little feet must climb many stairs..."

Two little boys who had been the plagues of Victoria had gone roaming and ended up in the Home of Refuge in Philadelphia, 75 years ago—and the Colonist doubted that money would be advanced to bring them home again.

"During their long residence in Victoria the two youngsters distinguished themselves by stealing almost everything portable that came their way—a red hot stove, that was the joy and delight of the cook of one of the sailing schooners, falling into their net with other plunder. How they secured a summer's supply of soda water, and provided a comfortable nest for themselves under one of the wharves, as well as their farewell to the provincial reformers, are still fresh in the memory of Victorians."

"On the last occasion they honored the police station with their presence the jailer seemed particularly uneasy, and on enquiry being made as to the cause replied, 'Faith and shouldn't I be uneasy? If I take my two eyes off the city hall, sin chances to wane the little devils pocket it.'"

The half-yearly examination at the Nanaimo Public School (which took place June 20) was reported 100 years ago to have been pronounced highly satisfactory "as a general thing."

"The answers in Mental Arithmetic were good, as were also those in English History. In Grammar, the answers were given readily and correctly by the first class; and by the second, fairly. Answers in Geography were good. The reading was highly commendable..."

The Russian trading bark Prince Menschikoff, 10 days from Sitka, was in Victoria—"Two passengers, the son of the Vice-Governor of the Russian-American Possessions, and Mrs. Sweeneyoff, came by this arrival. The bark will carry back cargo of coal and general merchandise."

Also newly in port, from the northwestern coast of British Columbia was the schooner Nonpareil, with a cargo of codfish, oil, grease and colichans. She had sighted the steamer Otter bound north off Kitimat, June 16, and "a sloop and two schooners, names unknown, were passed in Queen Charlotte Sound."

Hallucination Drug 'Happy Pill' of Bright Youth

BACKGROUND

By GEORGE REASONS
from Los Angeles

LSD, which exploded into the public consciousness little more than a year ago, has become the illicit "happy pill" of America's brightest youth.

Its use began with a small circle of intellectuals. Then it spread to students on large university campuses.

Now it has trickled down to smaller campuses — and even as low as the junior high schools.

Most of the users are under 21. Almost all of them come from the ranks of the white middle class.

UCLA's Dr. Fisher estimates, he says "conservatively," that at least 10 per cent of UCLA's student body has used the drug. Others estimate that up to 30 per cent at the University of California's Berkeley campus have used LSD.

Dr. Sidney Cohen, veteran

Los Angeles, says somewhere major urban centres: New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Most of the users are in four: Dr. William Froesch, NYU

Enough LSD to blast 5,000 persons into "psychedelic" orbit can be placed on three of your fingernails.

A pusher could peddle it through the mails by placing it beneath a postage stamp, which easily could accommodate 200 doses, on the flap of the envelope.

The drug is odorless, colorless and tasteless and is so powerful that a single gram (28.3 grains equal an ounce) would make 5,000 doses of 200 micrograms each, a satisfactory level for the user.

A single dose can be seen only by the sharpest eye. There is no syringe, no bent spoon which are ever present in the heroin addict's world, LSD can be taken in a glass of water, on a sugar cube, or by simply licking the flap of a doctored envelope.

Evidence of the drug quickly disappears from the user's body, doctors say. His behavior under the influence of the drug could easily be mistaken as the behavior of a common drunk.

The basic ingredient of LSD (lysergic acid diethylamide) and the most sophisticated chemically, can be bought in a score of countries.

The average high school student could not convert it into LSD but the average graduate chemistry student could.

A tiny speck of the drug — barely visible to the naked eye — causes vivid hallucinations, distorts sensory perception and frequently creates feelings of depersonalization of being outside one's body.

Under influence of LSD, users argue, they see themselves as they really are, stripped of the masks they wear in society.

They say it gives them insight into themselves and an enhanced vision of the universe and their place within it. The latter they contend is essentially a religious experience. LSD is an intellectual drug, they add. Others take it for pure fun.

Passion for Unanimity Puts Brake on Decisions

Peter C. Newman, in his book on the Eisenhower years, Renegades in Power, says that the prime minister seldom approved of a course of action unless he got unanimity among his cabinet ministers. Consequently, there was federal indecision and delay.

This passion for unanimity is one of the worst faults of municipal government in my opinion, and we're getting far too much of it at City Hall. This administration seems that almost invariably in committee where the goal decision will be rejected for work of governing as done, it defers or deters.

A LOOK AT LEARNING

By BILL STAVDAL

Peace with honor has settled at least temporarily on the affairs of the Greater Victoria school district following two top administrative appointments last week.

A new district superintendent and a new director of secondary education have been named. The circumstances surrounding these appointments make the Victoria education scene probably the most interesting and significant in B.C.

On Wednesday, Education Minister Peter Gough announced the appointment of Joseph Chell, assistant district superintendent since 1960, to succeed John Gough as superintendent. Mr. Chell is a personable and competent administrator known as Joe by almost everyone. He has served as assistant superintendent since 1960 and would have been the natural and unquestioned successor to Mr. Gough in the ordinary course of events.

But Greater Victoria hasn't got an ordinary school board, and the situation lately has been far from routine.

John Gough is retiring a year early, mainly because he is tired of tussling with the board over who will be the real boss of the district's affairs. A district superintendent is a government appointee and as such is primarily responsible to the department of education, not the board. Mr. Gough never wavered from his terms of reference.

The board, on the other hand, has long been fed up with being a rubber stamp for the department of education. It's no longer content just to raise money and pay the bills and make minor decisions.

The board had a new sense of maturity and strength when its chairman and vice-chairman both declared that Mr. Gough's successor must be the choice of the board and be responsible to it.

Closely associated with Mr. Gough and at age 62 not far from retirement, Mr. Chell didn't seem to fit in the picture. His appointment came as a surprise to many. Did the board change its mind or pull in its horns?

"We didn't pull them in, we had them chopped off," one trustee remarked last week.

What happened was that the department of education, a bit annoyed at the upstairs school board, simply pointed to the regulations and gave the board a list of candidates to choose from.

Mr. Chell was the choice, and the circumstances reflect no discredit on him. The government announcement that Mr. Peterson was "pleased to accept the recommendation" of the school board was a silly piece of window dressing for public consumption.

So the board and Mr. Chell must now work together for the next three years. I think the shotgun marriage will be a fairly happy one. The board isn't out to crush anyone, and Mr. Chell, though he will act as the government's man, is an easy person to get along with.

The board will press on for more autonomy but it is quite anxious to avoid giving the impression that it is power-mad. Mr. Chell, having observed the disputes between the board and his predecessor, isn't apt to provoke three years of strife to end his career.

The board has much more latitude in the choice of a new assistant superintendent. Chairman John Porteous announced immediately that a young man capable of succeeding Mr. Chell will be sought.

The second appointment last week was that of Victoria High School principal G. A. Victor Thomson as director of secondary education. It is a post just below that of assistant superintendent.

The board's choice served to affirm its right to go outside the district to get the best man for the job, and simultaneously reassured district teachers who have been worried about the new policy.

One of the three finalists interviewed by the board was from West Vancouver, but the trustees chose a local man. Among Mr. Thomson's strong points in the decisive job interview were his ideas on experimentation in the classroom, such as team-teaching, and better staff utilization. This sounds like the sort of person ready to implement changes in the Hartwick-Downey report, and one whom secondary school teachers will welcome.

Just about everyone, then, is reasonably happy. To top it all, there are rumored changes coming in school regulations that may make the board even happier.

CITY HALL COMMENT

By A. H. MURPHY

Issues will be kicked around for months from one committee or city official to another. The opposition of two or even one alderman is enough to have a matter tossed back for a report, usually from the city manager.

And it's all because committee chairmen will not "put the question" and force a showdown. Aldermen will talk two or three or a dozen times on the same question in defiance of all rules of order. The endless loitering goes on and on and usually, in the end, decision is deferred.

One can understand the aldermen's desire to get all possible information on a subject before making up their minds, but their caution turns into just plain waffling.

This sort of nonsense slows the whole administrative procedure at City Hall down to a walk and justifies charges of "red tape." People who are anxiously awaiting decisions so that they can get on with the job take it out on city officials who are powerless in the face of this vacillation at the committee level.

Private companies don't expect unanimity in the board of directors before decisions are made. They want and must have action, and conclusions must be formulated over the objections of dissenters.

Why can't we have this at city hall?

Industry Accuses Government

Forests Stay Denuded

CAPITAL REPORT

By JACK FRY

We have instant coffee and instant towns in British Columbia. But we have no instant trees. Seedlings by the millions will have to be planted in order to provide for future expansion of the province's giant forest products industry.

Spokesmen for the forest industry who sounded this warning earlier have taken up the cry again, upon the recent publication of the annual report of the B.C. Forest Service for the year 1965.

They claim B.C. is nowhere near achieving its maximum forest output potential because the government is not spending enough time and money on reforestation of publicly-owned land.

A facts sheet distributed by the Council of the Forest Industries of British Columbia argues — perhaps rightly so — that while the forest service report shows progress is being made in the planting of seedlings, its statistics do not show what is not being done in this field.

The industry maintains it is council says has been denuded planting plenty of trees on privately owned land but that the government is not planting nearly enough on public lands and is not spending enough money to prevent the destruction each year by fire of nearly half-a-million acres of forests.

Estimates for the current fiscal year show that the government has set aside $750,000 for forest nurseries and planting operations, hardly enough to even start the job of reforesting the 28,000,000 acres of public lands which the forest the point where export of lumber is being harmed by a limited supply of raw materials.

The industry also feels that since hemlock has become a major item both in the production of pulp and for building purposes that the government should find some way of maintaining a satisfactory supply of hemlock nursery stock.

If the principle of sustained yield logging is to be carried out effectively in this province it certainly makes sense that industry will need more trees to support greater production.

It would be a grim situation to find out 25 to 50 years from now that what once had been thought of as a renewable resource was in fact depleted because of lack of foresight in the 1960s.

There's a time to work and a time to play. There's a time to sing together, and a time to part.

The time of parting has come to the popular Victoria singing group The Roadside Trio. The two men and a girl have parted many crowds in many cities at the Dungeon Coffee-house, the bright house, A-Go-Go, Oak Bay High, spots that have glimmered in the Victoria Music Hall, Legion, Victoria's night-life.

One has left Victoria, another is leaving, and the third will continue singing here alone. The trio consisted of Ed Simpson-Buldie, 30, Laurence Dostans, 25, and Carole Lyette, 22.

Ed, a university student and Carole, a radio continuity writer, sang together for a year before Laurence joined them. Laurence, piano and guitar player and singer, worked with the Wayfarers before formation of the Roadside trio.

All the hours of rehearsal, the spit about as evenly as con-jokes, the hot days, the singing, and the fun were over. The three sat and looked at each other. "It was fun," Laurence said. "Times change," Ed said. "When this story goes in I want 10 copies," Carole said.

world is asking now: "Is the writing on the wall?"

It was a bad week for the Beatles. They were shoved around and now some people are asking if they're on the way out.

They didn't think they deserved the rough handling meted out by angry Filipinos at Manila airport who considered they had snubbed the Philippines' first lady, Mrs. Imelda Marcos.

The Beatles said it was all a mistake. But it must have been the first time they wished for no crowds at an airport. Perhaps more serious were the happenings back home. The compilers of the British pop charts announced the new Beatles disc, Paperback Writer, had fallen to number five on the lists after only two weeks at the top.

This was the shortest stay at number one for a Beatles record since their first hit, Please, Please Me, in February, 1963.

It is a fact that several critics panned the record when it came out, and Beatle Paul McCartney himself said it was perhaps not the best song they had written.

But the Beatles organization is taking it calmly.

"I don't really think any comment is called for," said a Beatles spokesman. "Except for the fact that these days such an advance demand is built up before the release date that everybody who wants a record goes out and buys it in the first two weeks."

Paperback Writer has sold 1,500,000 copies in Britain and the United States. The figure is impressive.

but past figures have seemed even more impressive.

The real test for the Beatles will be to see if they still pull in as many on their U.S. tour in late August and early September. It will be their third long concert tour of America.

It has been said that perhaps enthusiasm for them is waning in Britain because of their decision to keep their lives out of the public eye. With three of the Beatles now married they prefer to have a large share of privacy.

The marriages may have hurt, too.

And a good many teenagers have been down on the Beatles since their parents began accepting them, preferring instead the Rolling Stones on the ground parents will never like their act.

Bill Thomas ON MUSIC

This city is getting the short end from too many entertainment promoters.

Large shows with full bills of top names are booked into Vancouver on the tip of the northern swing and then this city gets a quick trip from a couple of name artists who skim a little cream off the pot.

If you want a good example in reverse take a look at the Paul Borey show and the Harry James concert band.

Both these shows were tops. Each entertainer worked hard, their hands worked hard and they gave it all they had. Either one could get a return booking here and do a great business.

But look at some of the others, inferior productions, poor lighting, PA and sound systems that refuse to behave.

Arena Doors Opened

Last time hundreds stood outside and listened after arena manager Jack Morgan threw open the doors so those who had been disappointed could at least hear.

These men put on a great show. The Pacific choir did the same. The Welsh male voice choir would do a great business in this town again — they worked hard and they were superb.

Our cry-baby promoters would be well advised to stop diluting their beer with tears and take a look at their offerings.

When Mr. and Mrs. Victoria shop around to spend their entertainment dollar there is plenty to spend it on. If a few more impressos tried the simple formula of giving value for money instead of trying the fast-back wheel-dealer routine they might build a following.

So how about it? Let's start with the little things.

- Get the acts in the theatre on time.
- Check the sound systems and the levels before the show starts.
- Cut out the cheap commercials during the show.

Ballet Group Here Soon

Ballet Bravura to Jazz

City ballet buffs will have a chance to see the Festival Ballet presentation of the Banff School of Fine Arts at the Victoria Playhouse Aug. 17 piece in modern ballet style in a show sponsored by the Victoria women's committee of the Victoria Symphony Society.

The dancers will be accompanied by a full orchestra under the direction of Claude Kenner, former music director for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet.

ALBERTA POST
He now is assistant professor of music at the University of Alberta in Edmonton.

The program will open with a pas de deux to music by Saint-Saens featuring French horn soloist and the Victoria Symphony.

Another full company work to Shostakovich's first piano concerto will have an orchestral accompaniment with Sylvia Hunter, formerly lead pianist for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, as piano soloist.

SATURN DAUGHTERS
The number "By Jupiter" has a farcical plot concerning the planets. Main characters will include Jupiter, Mother Earth, her daughter Luna, Venus, Mercury and Mars, with the girls of the corps de ballet as the daughters of Saturn.

These three numbers are all choreographed by James Clouser, ballet master of the Royal Winnipeg Ballet.

MODERN JAZZ
The program will conclude with a modern jazz number choreographed by Gladys Forrester, principal of the Gladys Forrester school of dancing in Toronto and well-known for her work on television, theatrical and commercial productions in Eastern Canada.

The number will feature Eva von Genex, modern jazz instructor for many years at the Banff School of Fine Arts, and Richard Brown of Ottawa.

Vancouver Symphony Falls Short

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver Symphony Society has fallen $27,000 short of its $150,000 fund-raising goal for this year even with an extended campaign.

Money from the drive, which began in March, will be used to pay off past and future deficits, but is not enough to support planned increases in salaries of musicians and the size of the orchestra.

THE TOYOTA CROWN FEELS BRAND NEW FOR THE FIRST 15,000 MILES

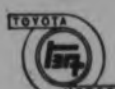

It took about six months for some Toyota dealers to learn that they shouldn't demonstrate a brand new Toyota Crown. The plain truth is that a Toyota Crown is just too stiff when it's new. It needs about 15,000 miles on the clock before it gives its true performance.

Toyotas are stiff when they're new because that's a part of Toyota's tradition of building cars to last longer than other compacts. Japanese people don't have as much money as Canadians so they have to keep their cars about ten years. And they keep them in a country which has some of the worst roads in the world as well as some of the finest super highways. The cars have to be strong and rugged and reliable or nobody will buy them.

The first thousand miles in a Toyota won't thrill the average new car buyer. But drive a Toyota Crown with 15,000 miles on the clock, or 30,000 or 100,000 miles and it's a different kind of car. The solid 18 gauge steel body (4 1/2 w.g. heavier than standard automotive sheet metal) is silent up to 80 on the highway and the soft, controlled suspension absorbs any kind of bump without creaks, groans or rattles. The Toyota is the only car in its class with a massive X-braced, box section frame combined with a one piece body. The whole thing is so strong and safe that a Toyota rally car was rolled onto its side in last year's CNE rally and yet there was only one minor dent in a rear fender. All doors opened easily and no glass was broken. Total repairs were $30.00.

When you go to your CME dealer's, see if you can take a demonstration in a Crown with more than 15,000 miles behind it. Then buy a new one and put up with a "right" car for the first few thousand miles. When the car has done 50,000 miles you'll be glad you did.

Rewarding Festival

Ella Steals Newport

By LEONARD FEATHER
The Los Angeles Times

NEWPORT R.I. The four-day, 14th annual Newport jazz festival turned out to be one of the most rewarding in the memory of most Newport veterans.

And if there was one artist whose work stood tall among all the giants, it was Ella Fitzgerald.

Brilliantly accompanied by the Duke Ellington band she ran through a set that ranged from the superb old Billy Strayhorn-Ellington songs to The Shadow of Your Smile.

Never has there been heard a more moving example of the spirit, beauty, boat and total vocal control of which a jazz singer is capable. Ella can do anything to a melody except damage it.

Big band nostalgia spun off the bandstand like a 78-rpm record.

Woody Herman followed his soaring, soaring current band with a late-1940s set bringing back three of his great saxophonists, Stan Getz, Al Cohn and Zoot Sims, and adding Gerry Mulligan.

Count Basie rekindling the teenage song hit which has taken too much of his time recently dug back into the books for the graceful swing of his old bands, especially sought the Blues and 8:20 Special.

Jimmy Rushing jubilantly rejoined the Basie band for three great songs. And veteran trumpeter Roy Eldridge who has just hooked up with Basie added a long compelling blues solo.

AN INSPIRED DIZZY The other names included Miles Davis, Teddy Wilson, Herby Mann, Buddy Rich, Ruby Braff, Bobby Hackett, Thad Jones, Red Allen new guitarist, George Benson, Michigan pianist, Father Tom Vaughn—and best of all, an unbelievable display of inspiration and technical brilliance by Dizzy Gillespie.

Admissions were a record of more than 45,000 up 35 per cent from last year.

Summer Session Discussion

Bank Act Providing Lots of Ammunition

By HARRY YOUNG
Business Editor

During parliament's summer recess and no doubt after its reassembly in September the provisions of the new Bank Act will keep politicians and others well primed with ammunition.

Because money interests everyone, the politicians have fastened on the proposed raising of the interest banks may charge on their loans, and the eventual removal of the ceiling altogether as the main argument in the Act.

But there are other less personal but nonetheless important provisions in the new act that demand just as careful scrutiny as the interest charges.

VITAL PROPOSALS

The right to raise new capital by issue of debentures and entry into the conventional mortgage field are vital new proposals.

The lack of stock market enthusiasm for bank stocks following announcement of the new proposals suggests that investors believe there is still too wide a gap between the regulations which affect the chartered banks and the looser guidelines under which the near banks operate.

On the face of it, there is surely some logic in the banks' argument that they may not lend money at more than six per cent when other organizations, offering more banking facilities to their customers, can charge whatever they like for their loans.

The proposed immediate and interim increase to 7 per cent may or may not right the situation, Mr. Sharp thinks it will.

FOR SAFETY ONLY

The only reason why persons now deposit their savings in the chartered banks is (1) for convenience or (2) for absolute safety.

The rest will be tempted, and most of them are, to accept the higher risk of placing their savings with the trust companies and other institutions with savings departments.

Even on Fridays the banks generally close their doors at 6 p.m. while the stores all around them are open until 9 p.m. and later.

Most of the people who do their Friday evening shopping are not in the downtown or shopping centre area until they have had their evening meal. This means that the banks are closed before the bulk of them arrive.

One Canadian bank has shown some enterprise in opening a branch in Montreal General Railway station that will have hours to catch the peak movement through the terminal. This is in the nature of an experiment, and like other similar banking experiments in shopping centres it may well provide the banks with some useful information.

NO OBVIOUS RELIEF

On the other hand the chartered banks are unquestionably crippled by the largely unregulated competition of the near-banks with which they have to contend and it cannot be said that the new bank act proposals give them very obvious relief.

Mr. Sharp clearly thinks the 7 per cent he is offering them is enough, for in his official statement to the Commons last week he concluded by expressing the hope that in the next decade "we will witness a significant modernization of our banking system."

Those are words which the top executives of our chartered banks should think about carefully and introspectively.

What did Mr. Sharp mean?

PRICE OF BILINGUALISM

The Bank of Canada Bill is not to be confused with the Bank Act — this year includes the provision that the Bank will have a period of three weeks instead of two weeks between completing its yearly account and reporting to the public.

The extra week is required so that the bank report may appear simultaneously in English and French. Hitherto the French edition has appeared after the English one.

Will Force Major Changes

Directors' Overlap Touchy Bank Topic

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP)—Adoption of Finance Minister Sharp's proposed Bank Act revision to force a considerable change among the men who sit around the board room table of many of Canada's big corporations.

One of the main objectives of Mr. Sharp's bill, introduced over opposition objections in the Commons, is to break up existing interlocking corporate directorates, particularly as between the chartered banks and the trust and loan companies that accept deposits from the public — the so-called near-banks.

Simply stated, a bank director may not serve on the board of directors of another bank or of a near-bank.

281 DIRECTORS

Altogether the eight chartered banks have 284 directors. Many of these serve as directors of a number of other companies. At the time of the latest report filed with the federal government, there were 2,733 companies in Canada which had directors sitting on the board of at least one bank. There were 30 companies whose directors were represented on the board of four banks. There were two companies whose directors were members of the board of six banks.

At a press briefing last week, Mr. Sharp was asked whether he had considered making it illegal for a company director to serve on the board of any bank with which his company does business.

Mr. Sharp doesn't go that far. As he explained it, to put in such a provision would mean that Company A going to a bank to do business would have to deal with a bank in which his company had no voice on the board of directors, but Company A's competitor, Company B, could be represented on the board.

What Mr. Sharp does intend to do is introduce real competition between the banks and the near-banks. There are 17 near-banks which had, at last report, six or more of their directors serving on bank boards — not necessarily all in the same bank. This will be outlawed.

SELL SHARES

The chartered banks will have to divest themselves of large shareholdings in near-banks. This isn't all public information, but it is known, for instance, that the Bank of Nova Scotia has a large ownership interest in Eastern and Chartered Trust.

The Toronto-Dominion bank owns a large share of Canada's Permanent Mortgage, which in turn owns a large number of shares in National Trust. In no case, it is understood, does the bank own a majority of shares of the trust companies.

There are several companies in the field of finance, though not trust and loan companies, which are owned to a substantial degree by chartered banks. Royal Bank owns a large part of Kinnear, and Commerce owns a large part of Kinross.

One feature of the Bank Act revision is to give the chartered banks some time in which to divest themselves of shares in excess of the limit allowed. This, of course, is to allow an orderly sale of company stock so as not to unduly upset the market.

Mr. W. E. "Bill" Passmore
Mr. W. E. "Bill" Passmore, General Sales Manager, Associated Investors of Canada Ltd., is pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Passmore as District Sales Manager, Vancouver Island. Mr. Passmore is well-known as a Vancouver Island resident and has been through his most recent position as secretary-manager of the Royal Canadian Golf & Country Club, Associated Investors of Canada Ltd., as a member of the Principal Group, provides the investing public with a complete and diversified range of financial services.

WE CAN'T OFFER A 100% SAFE INVESTMENT and can anyone else? "SAFE" leaves a guarantee that there is no risk of loss. Well, when you really stop and think about it, there is nothing that is safe. On the other hand, carefully chosen investments can give you a very low risk, and this is what the prudent investor should be looking for. It is not a "safe" investment, but it is a "wise" investment. The assurance of small risk can be better obtained by getting the facts behind the company with whom you are considering investment. A study of the company's assets should tell you whether or not the company is a sound investment. In a manner, you really can recognize a sound investment. If you have any doubts, DON'T TAKE ON THE INVESTMENT!

Furthermore, size or age of the company do not always insure against loss. An investment in a company that has been around for 10 years ago! It is essential that the investor who has little knowledge of the company's business, be checked to learn that one of the bad debts, alone over a half-million dollars, was made to an individual as a Preliminary Note, WITH NO SECURITY!

Make the facts speak for themselves! There is little cash value in the words "safe," "guaranteed," or "secure," when a company liquidates.

Names in the News

Help Drops from Above

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — Inpatient drivers snarled in a morning freeway traffic jam gazed upward and gave a cheer. Police- man Don Miller had dropped from the sky.

Miller had been hovering above the snag in a radio station traffic observation helicopter. Finally, he decided to take action.

He instructed his pilot to land on the congested freeway and stepped out to direct traffic around a stalled auto.

CAIRO — Indian Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi conferred with Egyptian President Nasser on "international issues" which included chances for peace in Viet Nam.

VANCOUVER — President John R. MacDonald of the University of B.C. says the university is planning married students' quarters. He said the project will have one, two and three-bedroom suites with detached studios, covered playgrounds and laundry.

LANSING, Mich. — When Lansing residents complained to the police about noisy motorcycles, Chief Charles Stragier had no trouble finding some of the culprits they identified. He ordered the police motorcycle division to fix any noisy mufflers on department cycles.

VANCOUVER — A poem on punners, written as a Grade 11 English assignment and submitted "just as a joke," has won the B.C. Centennial Song Contest for 24-year-old Joan Chard of West Vancouver. "I wrote it when I was 16," Miss Chard said. "Our teacher used to assign poems as term assignments."

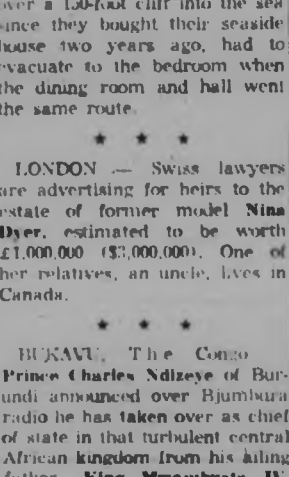

VANCOUVER — A coroner's jury ruled that motorcycle patrolman Larry Elmer was responsible for the traffic accident June 29 which took his life. The jury decided he was travelling at an excessive speed without flashing lights or a siren when he hit a car and was thrown 64 feet.

NEWCASTLE, England — Joseph Richardson was fined five pounds ($14) for posting as a police officer in a desperate bid to get a date with a girl, who — unfortunately for Joseph — was already married to a policeman.

LONDON — An American paid a record £10,000 ($20,000) for a 1910 Rolls Royce touring car, a sale of veteran and vintage vehicles at Lord Montague's stately Beaulieu home in southern England. The buyer was Dr. R. Gilmour of Chicago. Another 1910 Rolls went to a British buyer for £8,000 ($24,000).

LONDON — Irish writer Dominic Behan, brother of the late playwright Brendan Behan, was fined 7 pounds ($20) for chasing another man from a pub with "an offensive weapon" — a beer mug.

NAIROBI — Premier J. S. Mwangi-Njoroge of Buganda, who disappeared at the same time as the Kabaka (king) when President Milton Obote's troops stormed the royal palace May 24, has emerged here from hiding. He said he hopes to go to London and persuade the Kabaka, Sir Frederick Edward Nutesa, to return to his people.

WINDHOEK, South Africa — A 461-pound rock was the main exhibit when a Johannesburg man was committed for trial on charges of stealing a meteorite worth 25,000 pounds ($70,000). Carlo de Viaschi allegedly stole the meteorite from the grounds of a school where it was being displayed two years ago.

Vacation Map Points Way North

At last there is a vacation road map available for those who wish to take the drive over limited access logging roads to the northern end of Vancouver Island.

Just off the press is the third of Doris Ebert's north Vancouver Island travel maps and this is a quarter-inch to the mile map, showing all the roads the public may use in non-operating hours, which generally means holidays and after six and before seven on week days.

Other Maps

Mrs. Ebert's other two maps are the Campbell River-Sayward Lakes area, and the Courtenay-Forbidden Plateau area, are three-quarter inch to the mile scale, but she had to use the smaller scale for her newest map because the distances are so much greater than for the others.

The maps will be available at Ed's Rod and Gun, 1315 Esquimalt Road, and probably other places in Victoria as well as many places in the Campbell River and Courtenay areas.

Distance Clear

Distances dot to dot between points are clearly indicated.

Thick black lines show hard-topped public roads. Thin black lines show public gravel roads. Long broken lines show limited-use public access logging roads.

The new map shows campfire spots, boat launching ramps, picnicking spots and where hotel or motel accommodation may be obtained. It also shows places where you can buy gasoline, which are few and far between, and you would be well advised to carry extra gas.

Something new on this map is that it shows sea routes: the Metchika Inlet trip on the Uchuck, the Queen of Prince Rupert trip and the Coast Forces run between Kelsey Bay and Beaver Cove.

We have learned that for the time being, at least, the M.V. Uchuck has stopped its tourist trip around Nootka Sound, a trip we looked forward to this summer. But it is still running its overnight freight run to Tahsis and Zeballos. There is a hotel at Tahsis and a plush hotel at Zeballos. The ship arrives in Tahsis about 9 p.m. then goes on to Zeballos, arriving back at Tahsis about 8 a.m. on the return trip next morning.

If you plan to make your north Island trip one way by boat it might be a good idea to go up by boat and back by car, because often there is a lineup in the mornings at Beaver Cove for the down-Island trip to Kelsey Bay.

It seems that many motorists drive up-Island find the north Island road so rough they decide to return by boat. The cover of the new map is devoted to information about roads, transportation, camping, gas stations and the places you will visit.

You can drive at any hour seven days a week the 42 miles from Campbell River before coming to the Elk River Timber Co. gate, 17 miles from Gold River townsite. That gate is only open to public travel in non-operating hours.

Tahsis Co. officials told us Wednesday the Metchika Lake campsite with 32 camping units, which was burned by a slash fire the day it was to open last year, is now open for use, although grass planting and other work is still to be done. It includes a launching ramp, plane float and parking area. The Tahsis Co. is also building another smaller campsite on Metchika River, half a mile below the lake.

Fishing access to the Gold River tree grounds will be up in the air again this year. The public won't be barred, but it will have to take a chance on the road being open.

There will be plenty of pulp mill construction work underway this summer and conditions won't be the best for fishermen.

Facilities Provided

Canadian Forest Products has provided camping and boat launching spots at Vernon Lake, Woss Lake and Schoen Lake.

There is no provincial park accommodation on the north Island.

A road the public may now travel on a restricted basis is the Benson Lake mining road, where there is good fishing along the way at Kengish Lake, Three Lakes and Iron Lake. Benson Lake is not much good for fishing any more as a result of mine tailings which are dumped in the lake.

Another series of maps which can bring a wealth of fun to outdoorsmen is a new set of 11 maps of MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Company logging operations which are open to public use in non-operational hours.

These maps may be obtained from Mac-Powell division offices and from tourist offices and sporting goods stores adjacent to each division. Up to now there had been a limited number of the maps available.

Division Maps

Divisions for which maps are available are Shawigan, Copper Canyon, Northwest Bay, Spruce Lake, Franklin River, Cameron, Menzies Bay, Kelsey Bay, Port Hardy, Squamish and Stillwater.

Mac-Powell has opened 3,000 miles of its private roads to visitors, providing a means of entry into large tracts of forest land formerly not readily accessible, most of it on Vancouver Island.

In an average year, about 60,000 visitors to company logging areas record bags of more than 4,000 deer, 15 elk, 50 bear, 4,000 grouse and other game birds and catch 25,000 fish.

But fishermen and hunters are not the only ones who enjoy use of the logging claims. Swimmers, picnickers, berry pickers, rock hounds, naturalists, canoeists and just plain hikers all make great use of Vancouver Island's recently-opened forestlands.

Other companies which supply road maps of their logging claims include Crown Zellerbach and Rayonier, and Tahsis Company, and there is a map of north Island roads printed on your access permit which you get at the Elk River Timber Company gate.

Trouble for Some in U.S.

Medical Profiteers Hit

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Trouble is shaping up for any doctors in America reaping profits from ownership in pharmaceuticals, drug firms, repackaging companies and other businesses used by their patients.

We're going to expand on the justice department action," promised chairman Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., of the Senate antitrust and monopoly subcommittee.

The justice department Thursday accused the 4,500-member American College of Pathologists of forcing the nation's sick to pay excessive prices for services in laboratories almost entirely owned by the physicians themselves.

ALL INVOLVED

The government's week-old Medicare program, raising medical costs and the drug industry all may be involved in coming Congressional hearings.

Later this summer, Hart will begin hearings on legislation he has introduced to prohibit doctors from profiting from items they prescribe for their patients. In such cases, Hart said, the patients were "captive consumers."

According to Hart, the "worst abuse" involves doctors who own drug repackaging firms. The physician buys big wholesale quantities of generic drugs and packages them under a trade name, he said.

OWN DRUG

"Then the doctor will prescribe his own drug which the druggist is required to give the patient," Hart said.

Some doctors share ownership of pharmacies, many of them in medical buildings, and often advised patients to fill their prescriptions there, the senator added.

Alean, Union Can't Agree

KITIMAT (CPI)—Negotiations between the Aluminum Co. of Canada and the United Steel Workers of America (USWA) have been adjourned after no agreement was reached in talks before a conciliation officer. ALCAN issued a statement saying union and company officials agreed to further meetings, pending a report from a conciliation officer.

Hart said there were some cases of ophthalmologists selling eyeglasses they prescribe instead of sending patients to an optometrist. "In most of these situations, the patient paid higher prices than necessary," he said.

PRICES SET HIGH

The justice department antitrust suit said the pathologists fixed prices at artificially high levels at their laboratories and boycotted other firms conducting blood and urine tests that were "not owned and operated solely for the profit of pathologists."

Answering a charge of "harassment" because of the AMA's critical stand on Medicare, a department official said the pathologists were well aware of the year-old investigation that led to the lawsuit.

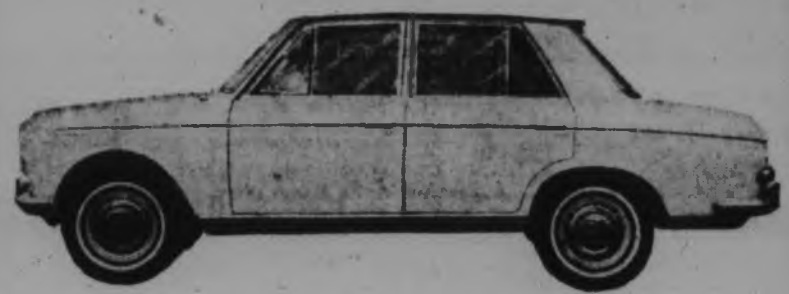

"They were forced to give us their records on this matter last year, so it couldn't be much of a surprise," he said.

ROLE IN MEDICARE

Hearings by Hart's subcommittee and another headed by Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., also will determine the role any excessive prices might play in the costs of medical care.

"In their Cameras, Radios, Motorcycles and now their Automobiles, Japanese Manufacturers offer the buyer HONEST VALUE AT A VERY REASONABLE PRICE. The DATSUN SEDAN is a fine example. It gives the most big car comfort we've run across in any small car. Also sturdy construction and outstanding economy."

Frightened by Bear

Lost Terrace Man Safe But Weary

PRINCE RUPERT (CPI)—A cold and hungry Terrace man, reported missing and feared drowned, walked out of dense brush Friday and was driven to hospital here by a passing motorist.

Raymond Sommerville, 25, disappeared Wednesday near the Skeena River and police dragged the river Thursday after his car and fishing equipment were discovered on the bank.

The Terrace recreation director told police he was frightened by a bear and ran into the bush to escape the animal.

He spent 48 hours wandering through the bush until stumbling out on Highway 16 linking Terrace and Prince Rupert where he was picked up by the motorist.

He was in satisfactory condition in hospital, suffering from exhaustion.

Only Wind Can Hamper Colonist Swim Classes

By MARGIE NAYSMITH
"Swimming rain or shine" is our slogan, and that's just what we did. Swim one day in the rain, two days in cloudy weather, and one in the sun. Really the weather makes very little difference. Wind is our only enemy, and fortunately it stayed flat calm all week.

We worked on kicking and breathing this week with instructions to practise whenever possible. Next week we will start the gliding.

One little reminder: It is really important that the children have a bag large enough to hold their clothes while they are in the water and strong enough to hold a wet bathing suit and towel.

Also please put name and address clearly on the outside of the bag. As I have said before, once the children take off their clothes I'm sure most of them cannot tell you what they had on. They cannot remember the color of their socks or shirt. So if we could have names on the bag our task would be that much easier.

Parents wishing to have children wait at the lake instead of taking the bus back to town must give them a signed note, or they will be sent back on the bus. No exceptions will be made.

Paper Uses Poem

Wilson's Wife Sent Cheque From Izvestia

LONDON (UPI) — Mrs. Mary Wilson, wife of Britain's prime minister, has received a cheque from Izvestia, the Soviet government newspaper, which reprinted a poem she wrote about "the bomb" it was disclosed Saturday.

Mrs. Wilson has donated the entire sum of the cheque, which was not disclosed, to the National Society for Mentally Handicapped Children, a charity in which she is interested.

The poem, "After the Bomb," was written three years ago and reprinted in Izvestia shortly after Mrs. Wilson visited Moscow with her husband earlier this year.

The poem:

"After the bomb has fallen,
After the last sad cry,
When the earth was a burnt out cinder,
Drifting across the sky:

Came Lucifer, son of morning,
With his fallen angel band,
Silent and swift as a vulture,
On a mountaintop to stand.

And he looked, as he stood
On the mountain,
With his scarlet wings unfurled,
At the charnel house of London,
And the cities of the world.

And he laughed . . .
And as that mocking laughter
Across the heavens ran,
He cried "look" to the fallen angels
"This is the work of man"

Who was made in the image of God."

Riot Damage Totals $500,000

Prison Employees Help Prevent Physical Violence

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP) — "If they hadn't been in that yard, somebody would have been killed for sure," said a prisoner at the Maryland penitentiary, which suffered an estimated $500,000 damage in rioting Friday by prisoners who set fires.

The prisoner was one of those who credited James Jordan, an assistant warden, and Kenneth Coleman, classification officer, with helping avert physical violence. Both are Negroes at the penitentiary which houses more than 1,400 prisoners, two thirds of them Negro.

Saanich Cows Winners

Two Saanich cows have been awarded the Canadian Jersey Cattle Club's "ton of gold" and lifetime production certificates. Dogwood Vallant Velma, a Jersey in the herd of P. B. Hoole and Sons, 5846 Oldfield, was recognized for producing 2,076 pounds of fat in 1,461 days.

Starhope D. Ginn Sensation, owned by J. A. Wright of Sanction, produced 2,036 pounds of fat in 1,428 days for her award.

To qualify for this cattle club award a cow must produce at least 2,000 pounds of fat in four consecutive years.

Injuries were few and minimal although hundreds of prisoners with baseball bats ran amok for more than two hours, starting fires in four buildings. Jordan, 41, was singled out especially for going into the open yard among them.

Jordan heard that a prisoner had been overcome in the burning commissary. He went in after him, was overcome himself and had to be dragged out. Warden Roger B. Copinger Jr. said it was the psychological turning-point in the riot. Soon afterward, the rioters with little prodding began returning to a cellblock.

The penitentiary atmosphere remained tense. The prisoners were confined to their cells Saturday, where they were fed on paper dishes.

The prisoner committee listed guard brutality, favoritism, poor food, high commissary prices and parole partiality among their complaints.

Gallery Gets Triple Help
VANCOUVER (CP) — A Canada Council grant totalling $38,000 has been given to the Vancouver Art Gallery to apply to exhibitions, research, restoration of paintings and library purchases. The gallery also received a $70,000 gift from the city and $4,000 designated for educational purposes from the provincial government.

Civil Rights Case

Klansmen Jailed Ten Years

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — U.S. District Judge William A. Boutilier sentenced two Ku Klux Klan members Saturday to 10 years in prison for crimes against Negroes.

It was the longest period of confinement he could impose on the two — Joseph Howard Sims, 41, and Cecil W. Myers, 26 — under an 1870 U.S. law that formed the basis of their convictions.

Boutilier could have fined each $5,000 in addition.

FOUR ACQUITTED
The verdicts were read Friday night at the end of two consecutive trials of Sims, Myers, and four other Klansmen, all charged with conspiring to violate the civil rights of Negroes. The other four were acquitted.

The charges arose from the slaying in 1964 of Lemuel A. Penn, a 49-year-old Negro educationist, killed by shotgun fire near Athens as he was returning to his home in Washington, D.C., from army reserve training at Fort Benning, Ga.

Sims and Myers were acquitted about two months after the shooting, of state charges that they murdered Penn.

WILL APPEAL
Defense counsel James Hudson said they would appeal the conviction. He told Boutilier the two were without funds and volunteered to continue representing them as court-appointed counsel.

Boutilier set bail at $35,000 each. One co-defendant, Herbert Gure, a 38-year-old garage operator, earlier had pleaded guilty to charges of selling "pimp" pills without a licence. Boutilier sentenced him to two years in prison. This case was not related to the civil rights charges.

WHITE JURY
Sims, a stocky, 41-year-old machinist, and Myers, 26, a bespectacled carpenter, were convicted by a white jury of 11 men and one woman. The verdict was sealed in an envelope for seven days to ensure fairness in the second trial, and was not made public until Friday night.

The jury that convicted Sims and Myers acquitted George H. Turner, 33, a maintenance worker.

The second jury of 12 white men deliberated about 9 hours before acquitting Gure, James S. Lackey, 30, former manager of an Athens service station, and Denver Willis Phillips, a 26-year-old mechanic.

Service Honors Seaman

A memorial service for a former Victoria man who went down with the New Zealand ship Kaitawa May 24 will be held July 14 at New Westminster's Holy Trinity Cathedral.

Radio officer of the ship was Philip D. Mowat, 21, of New Westminster, formerly of Victoria.

The service will be held at 7:30 p.m., with Rev. T. D. R. Allen officiating. In lieu of flowers, the family has asked donations be sent to the Ship Wreck Society of New Zealand, P.O. Box 92, Dunedin, N.Z.

Twenty-nine crew members went down with the Kaitawa. The Royal New Zealand Navy found a portion of the ship in 123 feet of water off the Pandora Banks, near the northern tip of New Zealand's North Island.

Indications were that the ship was on course and captured during one of the severest storms recorded in the area. It was New Zealand's worst sea disaster in more than 50 years.

In Death . . . Dignity

Because death is a universal human experience with profound emotional and social impact on the survivors, the customs and practices associated with it are very important.

Today people are at last finding the courage to protest against the orientation of high-cost funerals, as also against certain funeral practices which, in their opinion, conflict with human dignity. These people, all over North America, are banding together in non-sectarian, non-profit societies — of which the Memorial Society of British Columbia with its 10,000 registered members is typical — with the object of ensuring for their families low-cost funerals which combine simplicity with dignity.

Tiny Tanner Turns Tiger in 'Tank'

Elaine leaves swimming pool

By Doug Martin
VANCOUVER (CP)—Elaine Tanner of West Vancouver changes personalities when she dons her swimming suit—she becomes a tiger in the tank.

The new world record holder for the women's 220-yard medley "just doesn't like to swim slow," says coach Howard Firby of the Canadian Dolphins.

Elaine, 15, a modest and popular schoolgirl, becomes aggressive in the water.

"She beats most of the boys in practice because they aren't prepared to train the way she does," says Firby.

"I've never seen anyone who drives as hard as she does. Swimmers from out of town are astounded when they see her work at the pool."

SEEN SHY

Elaine is described as shy by friends but becomes talkative on the subject of swimming.

"I can't go to the pool without working hard," she said.

"I really like to kill myself in practice. I feel really good when I'm finished."

Her hard work carries over into school, where she has a straight A average in Grade 10. She says she spends her spare time "just goofing around" and plans to attend university when she graduates.

RECORD NO SURPRISE

Her world record 2:33.3 in the women's 220-yard medley at the B.C. open championships July 3 came as no surprise to those who know her. The time was one-tenth of a second under the pending world mark.

"She clearly demonstrated she is in world class," said Firby.

Elaine, just five-foot-two and 115 pounds, has been impressing judges and coaches since she joined Firby as an eight-year-old novice.

RIG WINS

Two months before setting her record she defeated two Olympic gold medal winners in the U.S. indoor championships at Bartlesville, Okla. She beat Catherine Ferguson of Los Angeles to win the 100-yard backstroke and Sharon Stouder of City of Commerce, Calif., to win the 100-yard butterfly.

Elaine has no jealous rivals despite her versatility, potential and exhausting training methods, says Firby.

"Most swimmers seem to have enemies," he said.

"Elaine has a lot of friends. She's a modest, popular girl. People don't actually jump up cheering when she swims but they all pull for her. A lot just stand in awe of her."

REGAN AS CHILD

Elaine began swimming as a seven-year-old in Sunnyvale, Calif., where the Tanners lived for a year.

"My mother wanted me to learn how to swim because she always liked it," says Elaine. "There was a pool next door so mom took me over for lessons."

GOES TO FIRBY

A year later, the Tanners were back in Vancouver and Firby took over as coach of the eight-year-old Elaine. She set a number of age-class records and moved into open competition at 14 years of age.

She won two Canadian titles in 1965 as a 14-year-old—the 100-yard butterfly and the 200-metre backstroke—and toured Britain and the continent as a member of the national team.

Elaine's success has drawn inevitable comparison with that Empire Games Miss Tanner of Mary Stewart, the Vancouver girl who held a world record and was voted Canadian champion in Hamilton, Ont., July 12-16.

BEG TEAM

Miss Stewart, now out of competition and a student at Simon Fraser University, won events, nothing she will do a gold medal in the 1962 British Commonwealth Games.

Nicklaus Realizes His Big Dream

MURFIELD, Scotland (AP)—Jack Nicklaus, the golden power man of professional golf, stormed his final citadel Saturday and won the British Open championship by one stroke with a twogunder par 282 over the challenging 6,887 yard Muirfield links.

The 28-year-old Columbus, Ohio, bomber had won every major title in his brief career and twice before knocked out the door of this one.

For a time it looked as though he would only be knocking again. But he withstood a momentary lapse to knock in a birdie four at the 17th which virtually sealed the issue. He played a safe four at the home hole while 10,000 fans roared approval.

WAITED IN VAIN

In the clubhouse, hoping against hope, were Doug Sanders of Ohio, Calif., and Dave Thomas, the World Ryder Cup star, who had posted 283 each.

Playing with Nicklaus was Phil Rodgers of La Jolla, Calif., who had to watch his own great chances crumble.

Rodgers started the day in the lead at 210 with Nicklaus at 212. The lead was wiped out on the first hole with a Nicklaus birdie against a bogey.

Arnold Palmer of Latrobe, Pa., challenged for a while but faded. Rodgers rallied, too, but couldn't start the pace.

Sanders and Thomas also challenged and in fact they did well enough to tie Al Perry's 283, which was the open record for the Muirfield course set in 1933.

CAME BACK STRONG

But Nicklaus slammed a 33 on the front nine and came back in 37 for a seven, one under par, and that settled the issue.

Rodgers finished with a 76 for 286 in a tie for fourth with Neil Nagle and Bruce Devlin of Australia, and Gary Player of South Africa, the 1965 Open king at Muirfield.

Days Matt of Litchfield Park, Ariz., Palmer, Peter Thomson of Australia and Sebastian Miguel of Spain tied at 288. The field strung out after that.

Those Lively Tykes Open Minor Boxla

The Shamrocks? No. Junior Shamrocks? Wrong again.

The liveliest, loudest, cutest lacrosse players are the Tykes. They range from six to eight years in age, and when they play at halftime at Shamrock inter-city games, few people leave their seats.

The Tykes lead off the minor lacrosse jamboree at Memorial Arena Tuesday evening at 6:30.

They'll be followed by the Novices (under 10), the Pee-wees (under 12), Bantams (under 14), and midgets (under 16).

Admission is only 25 cents and all proceeds go to minor lacrosse.

Lancaster Outplayed By New Quarterback

REGINA (CP)—Rookie import quarterback Tom Kennedy led the Greens to an upset 21-20 victory over the Whites in Saskatchewan Roughriders' annual inter-squad game before 8,000 fans in Taylor Field.

Kennedy completed 15 of 19 passes for 221 yards as his squad rallied from a 13-0 second-quarter deficit.

Flanker Hugh Campbell was Kennedy's favorite target, gathering in nine passes for 172 yards and one touchdown. Kennedy also completed touchdown passes to Canadian halfback Lew Thompson and import halfback Jesse Willis.

Canadian rookie Paul Cocks kicked two converts. The Greens' other point came on a wide field goal attempt by Dick Schnell, conceded in the end zone.

Tom Lancaster, Roughriders' first-string quarterback, completed only seven of 17 passes for 153 yards, Rookie Canadian

NEW YORK (AP)—Whites Ford, 37, a mainstay as a New York Yankees' starting pitcher during the last 14 seasons, has voluntarily placed himself in the bullpen, says manager Ralph Houk.

"Whitey thinks he can start a whole new career as a relief pitcher," Houk said of the southpaw who has won 232 major league games.

Ford has started nine times this season and has an 0-4 record for 153 yards, Rookie Canadian

Canadian Mare Posts Big First

WESTBURY, N.Y. (AP)—Canada's Armbr Flight became the first mare ever to win the Roosevelt International Trot at Roosevelt Raceway Saturday night, taking the $100,000 event by a neck over France's Roquepine.

The four-year-old mare, the 44 favorite, came off the rail coming into the stretch to open a five-length lead, then held off the closing charge of Roquepine.

The time for the mile and a quarter was 2:31.55, one-fifth of a second off the world record for the distance. It equaled the record for the International started in 1959.

Driven by little Joe O'Brien, Armbr Flight chalked up her 50th victory in 64 career starts and upped her earnings to $457,062, with the $50,000 first prize.

The Star's Pride mare, owned by the Armstrong brothers of Brampton, Ont., paid $3.60, $2.60 and $2.20. Roquepine, also a mare, returned $3.60 and $2.60 while Noble Victory, the U.S. entry, paid $2.60 to show.

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth will open the eighth world soccer championship at London's Wembley Stadium Monday and 16 of the world's top teams will battle until July 30 for the Jules Rimet trophy.

A total of about 2,000,000 fans are expected to watch the games spread over eight playing grounds throughout England.

Millions of persons will follow the games on television in all parts of the world. Radio broadcasts will go out in dozens of languages. Millions of words will be printed about the matches in places as far apart as Moscow and Stockholm. Rio de Janeiro and Rome.

Brazil's wonder team with players as Pele and Garrincha is rated a 2-1 favorite to win the cup for the third straight time and so make it its own property.

Any team winning the World Cup three times consecutively automatically takes the cup for keeps. Uruguay and Italy also have a chance of winning the trophy outright.

BRITAIN STANDS HIGH

England, the host country is second favorite at 4-1. Then comes Italy at 7-1, Argentina 8-1, West Germany 10-1, Russia 11-1, Hungary and Portugal 22-1, Spain 25-1, Bulgaria and Chile 66-1, North Korea 100-1, Switzerland 150-1 and Mexico 200-1.

England, as host nation and Brazil, as defending champion automatically qualified for the final. The other 14 teams had to battle their way through regional qualifying groups to win the trip to England.

A total of 352 players will compete and you would need much of the gold in Fort Knox to buy them. Pele's contract, for instance is valued at about $700,000. He is rated the greatest soccer player ever.

MANY OTHERS

Pele is just one of the stars, however. There's England's Jimmy Greaves, the goal stealer extraordinary; Portugal's sharp-shooting Eusebio, known as the Black Panther; Sandro Mazzola, Italy's star centre forward; Luis Suarez, Spain's brilliant inside forward; and Lev Yashin, Russia's famed goalkeeper playing in his third World Cup final.

The curtain goes up immediately after the official opening Monday with a match between England and Uruguay.

PLAY WELL AT HOME

History shows that home advantage favors the host country in the world cup.

Uruguay staged the first championship in 1930 and won it.

Then came Italy's chance to stage the championship in 1934. Again the home team won. Home advantage also helped Brazil to reach the final in 1950 and Sweden in 1958. The competition is held every four years.

The 16 finalists have been divided into four groups. England, Uruguay, Mexico and France play in the London section; West Germany, Switzerland, Spain and Argentina will play at Sheffield and Birmingham; Bulgaria, Brazil, Hungary and Portugal are bracketed in the Liverpool-Manchester section; Russia, North Korea, Chile and Italy are in the Middlesbrough-Sunderland group.

The will play a round-robin schedule and then the top two teams in each group will advance to the quarter-finals to be decided July 23.

Cheerleaders Lack That Extra Oomph

LONDON (Reuters) — The North Korean party which arrived here this weekend to take part in the World Cup soccer matches Monday disclosed the identity of a dozen "mystery men" among the 55 officials accompanying the group.

They are official spectators or cheerers. Kim Ki Son, the North Korean minister of sport, told reporters that "obviously we could not expect our followers to come all this way so we picked one or two people who know the game well with big voices to come and cheer the team."

Nationals Given 7-5 Edge

By JACK HAND

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Sam Rice, Koufax, Willie Mays and Hank Aaron, a tough combo when the heat is on, help make the National League a 7-5 favorite over the Robinson boys and the American League in Tuesday's All-Star baseball game at Busch Memorial Stadium.

The National League took the lead for the first time in the long series last year and holds an 18-14 edge going into this 75th midsummer meeting.

Taking charge of the competition that was dominated for so many years by the American League, the Nationals have won three in a row and seven of the last eight decisions.

Game time is 2 p.m. EDT with network NBC radio, and TV coverage.

Manager Walter Alton of Los Angeles Dodgers and Sam Rice of Minnesota Twins will make up their starting pitcher selections Monday. Koufax, the talented Dodger lefty who is well on his way to becoming the first 30-game winner since Dizzy Dean, appears the likely choice for the National. Mele is expected to turn to Denny McLain of Detroit Tigers.

The Nationals had to make one change in the starting lineup, exclusive of pitcher, chosen by vote of the players, managers and coaches. Due to a broken knee-cap suffered in batting practice, Houston's Joe Morgan had to give up the second base job. Alton named Jim Lefebvre, his own switch-hitting second baseman, to replace Morgan. Ron Santo of Chicago, playing with a special guard over the checkbone that recently was fractured, remained on the team at third base.

HAS THREE SOUTHPAWS

Alton has three left-handers on his eight-man pitching staff with Koufax, Bob Veale of Pittsburgh and relief man Bill McCool of Cincinnati, making their starting pitcher selections Monday. Koufax, the talented Dodger lefty who is well on his way to becoming the first 30-

St. Louis, Jim Bunning of Philadelphia and relief man Claude Raymond of Houston. Mele's staff is evenly divided, four of each. In addition to McLain the other right-handers are Gary Bell of Cleveland, Mel Stottlemyre of New York and Jim Catfish Hunter of Kansas City. The lefties are Sam McDowell of Cleveland, Steve Barber of league-leading Baltimore Orioles, Jim Kat of Minnesota and Pete Richert of Washington.

The Nationals, 4-2 winners last year in Minnesota, will have Willie McCovey of San Francisco at first, Lefebvre at second, Leo Cardenas of Cincinnati at short and Santo at third with Joe Torre of Atlanta catching and an outfield of he Giants' Mays, the Braves' Aaron and Pittsburgh's Roberto Clemente.

Frank Robinson, a former National League who was traded to Baltimore during the off-season is one of the big guns for the American League. He joins Tony Oliva of Minnesota and Al Kaline of Detroit in the outfield.

TORONTO (CP) — Veteran tackle Billy Shipp reported to Toronto Argonauts' training camp Friday as the Eastern Football Conference team cut five more players. Released were Len Hrice, Virginia; Ken Parsons, Oklahoma; Ed Hule and Bill Walters, Toronto, and Ian Monteith, Montreal.

Golf Program Lack Scored by Balding

PETERBOROUGH (CP) — George Knudson of Toronto could be Canada's last outstanding, touring golf professional. Balding, 42, professional at Markland Wood, Toronto.

No new Canadians are entering the United States pro tour because "there is no season, no golf program and no sponsor," Nick Westlake of Toronto is too old at 47. He has done all right in Canada, but he hasn't years, because of a shoulder played in the U.S. amateur. Gary Cowan of Kitchener is too busy and doesn't want to go. Mac Norman of Toronto doesn't care about going down because he is awarded by the big name golfers.

Balding, in Peterborough as instructor at a junior golf clinic, made his remarks in an interesting, humorous, golf professional view.

"There is no golf program in any of our colleges. They give a man a football or a hockey stick and at 40 he is finished. The golf season is too short in Canada, only six months."

Balding has been out of the touring circuit for a couple of years, but said he is returning. Although his weight is down and he has an allergy which affects his eyes and legs, he plans to return to the U.S. tour starting with the all-pro classic this weekend in Buffalo.

Victoria 'Stars Hockey Choices

Victoria All-stars look like runaway winners in the Esquimalt Summer Hockey League which begins play Tuesday at the Esquimalt Sports Centre.

The four-team league is something new as a summer recreation, but the fact that players have been found to stock four teams seems to indicate that interest is high.

The Victoria team, coached by Mike Woodley, has Woodley's brother Dave and Gary Schall, Schall and Dave Woodley are both career men in hockey. Woodley captained Niagara Falls of the Ontario Junior "A" League for the past two seasons, and Schall scored 71 goals for Muskegon of the International League last season.

Other teams in the league are Suburban Motors, Esquimalt All-stars and Ingham Hotel Raiders.

SECURITY begins with YOUR OWN HOME

There's a safe, warm feeling that comes with home ownership and the knowledge that provision has been made for your family. You establish roots. You "belong." When you're ready to buy a home, first talk to a Realtor who is a member of the Multiple Listing Service of the Victoria Real Estate Board. He will find you a home that answers all your needs.

Garden Notes

Tap Root Does It

By M. V. CHESNUT

BIRCH TREES—(L. B., New Westminster). I wouldn't say you lack the gift of the green thumb just because your transplanted birch trees up and died on you. Even Luther Burbank himself couldn't transplant a birch tree from the wilds successfully unless the attempt was made while the tree was still very young and small.

You see, the habit of the birch is to put down a long, deep, strongly tap root, and it is virtually impossible to dig up a tree in the bush without breaking this important root.

The reason why you can buy a birch tree from a plant nursery and transplant it successfully to your home grounds is because the nurseryman digs up and transplants his stock of birch trees every two years. This prevents the awkward tap root from forming and instead the tree forms a mass of short fibrous roots which are much more likely to survive transplanting.

FLOWERS FOR IDENTIFICATION—(J. W., Sidney). The specimens you sent me were too dried and broken for positive identification but, if you're willing to accept a wild guess on my part, I'd say the bit with yellow flowers is golden star, Chrysogonum virginianum. The purple-flowered bit is a flowering catnip, probably Nepeta Souvenir d'Andre Chaudron.

The feathery little lawn seed you so admire is Yarrow, and I'm afraid I don't know of any place where you could buy seeds. You could transplant small clumps to make your proposed Yarrow lawn, or you could buy seeds of anthem. nobilis, the chamomile, which is very similar and is often used for making an aromatic lawn.

Legend has it that Sir Francis Drake's famous game of bowls at Plymouth Hoe was played on a chamomile green. I find this hard to believe, for I don't think a ball would run true on a chamomile surface.

WATERING PROBLEMS—(T. S., Victoria). It is not true that roses and hydrangeas are injured by overhead watering, even in full sun. If this were so, these plants could not have survived summer showers of rain over the years.

It is true that overhead watering will wash away the protective coating of Rose Dust on the leaves, leaving them exposed to attack by insects and diseases, but more and more gardeners are turning to the new systemic sprays which enter into the sap and work from the inside, so can't be washed off.

ORNAMENTAL EVERGREEN—(S. E. O'L., Victoria). You write a tough bill of specifications when you ask for the name of a tree which is inexpensive, evergreen, fast-growing but not more than eight feet tall when fully grown. I can't think of any tree that fills the bill in every respect, but I have a suggestion:

The eastern white cedar, Thuja occidentalis, is evergreen and comparatively inexpensive, with 18-inch specimens selling for around $1.50 each. It is reasonably fast-growing but, if left to itself, it would shoot up to the dimensions of a forest tree. Fortunately, though, it stands clipping well, and I believe that with judicious and constant pruning it could be held for many years to the eight-foot height you specify.

The Little World of SHEILAH GRAHAM

He Thrives on Problems

LONDON (NANA)—Darryl Zanuck sent Arthur Jacobs a cable. "In 36 years in this business, Doctor Dolittle is the most difficult project I have ever come across," Jacobs, the 43-year-old producer, thrives on problems. He has produced only one film, What a Way to Go, with Shirley MacLaine, and yet he extracted $14,000,000 from 20th Century-Fox for the fantasy now being filmed.

Doctor Dolittle is only one of Arthur's productions for 1966-67. Early in the fall, the man who started his film career as a messenger boy at MGM will produce Choice Cuts, the most grisly horror story I have ever shuddered at. A French gangster, before execution via the guillotine, donates his body to science. It is used to supply missing limbs and parts to people who need them. A woman gets one of his legs. A parson gets an arm. A timid bank clerk gets the head and becomes a murderer. Roddy McDowall will play this role. Richard Attenborough is the surgeon.

In April, Arthur puts Richard Burton and Samantha Eggar into orbit in the musical version of Goodbye, Mr. Chips. Before or after comes Planet of the Apes, by Pierre Boulle who wrote Bridge on the River Kwai. It's about a group of astronauts, circa 1972, who get lost in outer space and land on a planet where the humans are treated like animals by the apes who are in control.

Arthur has a fine story in "Dolittle" with Rex Harrison singing-talking the Leslie Bricusse songs. And Tony Newley singing, period. There are 1,151 animals and birds in the film. How did he get that $14,000,000 voucher from Fox? It could be because of the long-time popularity of the Dolittle stories all over the world. But more, perhaps, because Arthur brought the complete package—script, stars, director, everything—to Zanuck.

Racquel Welch, who could be viewed on every magazine cover in Europe before she was seen in a single film, is now asking $25,000 for each of them. I must track her down to learn her secret. . . . Vanessa Redgrave has been invited to Red China by the government there. And if I know Vanessa, she will accept—when she has a spare couple of days.

Lee Marvin, fundamentally a sad man in spite of his Oscar and the $350,000 he receives per picture, told me—he's one of The Dirty Dozen—that a sequel is planned for Cat Ballou, but he will not be in it. And he's wise. How could he top himself? Lee's ex-wife Betty came over for a visit. And he is expecting girl friend Michele. Quite a man. Besides, he's used to playing two roles.

Steve Reeves, former Mr. America and discovered for film audiences by the ubiquitous Sam Levine in Hercules, is finally going to do what comes naturally. Steve is a superb horseback rider, and he will be making his first Western—in Italy, of course, where every producer gets his stars on a horse with or without an open space to back him up.

SYDNEY HARRIS

The human race perpetually oscillates between two tendencies: to build up an ordinary man into heroic proportions, and to cut a hero "down to size"; we are not content unless our public men are either larger or smaller than life.

For every one person that hate kills, a thousand are annihilated by indifference.

In any art or craft, the chief difference in motivation between the amateur and the professional is that the amateur desires the applause of the public, while the professional is mainly concerned with the respect of his professional colleagues.

Despite all the sophisticated processes for devising a cancer cure, I shouldn't be surprised if in the end it turns out to be very like some kind of bark with which the Indians cured warts centuries ago.

Everybody tries to make a virtue out of his particular vice: the compulsive Don Juan no doubt believes that men less preoccupied with women than he is are "under-sexed."

The bureaucrats in passport and visa offices seem to be more officious and bullying than bureaucrats anywhere else—possibly because they resent allowing people to travel freely while they are chained to their desks.

People who are chronically depressed seem somehow perversely proud of it, as if it made them superior to the superficial run of mankind who are sometimes merry; and there is reason to believe that melancholy is an incurable form of spiritual pride.

Whatever the dietary merits of their creed, it is hard not to agree with Flinley Peter Dunham that "Most vegetarians I ever see look enough like their food to be classed as cannibals."

People who serve the world without desiring it soon become the world's slaves; and those who despise the world without serving it soon become slaves to their own egos: the hardest and most useful attitude is a delicate blend of affection and contempt.

The indubitable fact that "a leopard can't change his spots" is used by many people simply as an excuse for skinning him.

The best way to win an argument is to concede as much as can possibly be conceded to your opponent's view without sacrificing anything essential to your own; success in argument is a direct opposite to success in bargaining.

ART BUCHWALD Meets Sleep-Wrecker

New York's Noise Planned

NEW YORK—It's hard to believe that noise in a major city is accidental. Most noise these days is planned and there are even companies who specialize in it. One such company is based in New York City and is known as the Planned Noise Organization. They have the contract for making New York one of the noisiest cities in the U.S.

I interviewed the president of the PNO in his luxurious offices on Sixth Avenue. He showed me a map of the five boroughs.

"The different colors on the map," he said "stand for the success or failure we've had in our noise campaign. The red areas are where we have made our greatest impact. There people get an average of four hours sleep a night.

"The blue areas are where we have made some inroads, but unfortunately people still get six hours sleep a night.

"The green areas over here in Staten Island and parts of Queens are virgin territory which we haven't gotten around to yet. Residents there still get eight hours sleep a night, but they won't be long."

"How do you manage to make a place noisy?" I asked him.

"We have many ways of doing it. Let's take 56th Street for example. For quite some time it was a very quiet street and the city was making very little headway in keeping the people awake. So they hired us. The first thing we did was to start digging up the streets at six in the morning on the pretense that it had to be paved.

"We did this for several weeks, but the people started to complain, so we had to come up with something more permanent. We discovered that the garbage trucks on 56th Street were making their pickups at 10 o'clock in the morning. Therefore we revised their schedule so they would start picking up and grunting garbage at 4:30 in the morning."

"That's wonderful," I said. "I notice there are sections of Queens that are marked in red. What did you do there?"

"That was one of toughest jobs. We didn't have enough jackhammers or garbage trucks to do a decent job in Queens, but we had something else in our favor.

"We found out that the telephone exchange at LaGuardia and Kennedy were making their approaches to the airports over water. So we arranged with the airlines to have the jets make it."

their approaches over the densely populated areas at night, and now we not only keep people awake in Queens, but in parts of Brooklyn and Nassau County as well."

"Do you ever use automobile horns in your work?"

"We have on occasion started honking horns in a quiet section late at night, but it hasn't had any lasting effect. We'd much prefer to use police sirens and fire engines or get a group of teenagers and give them a free case of beer around two in the morning."

"But those are only special jobs," he said. "For the long haul, the best way to keep people from sleeping is to arrange to tear down a building next to them or build a subway under their street."

"That must require quite a bit of funds," I said.

"Money has never been a problem when it comes to keeping people in New York awake. But in the past it's been a bit of a mispropotion. With our planning organization we will be able to make every part of the city as noisy as every other part."

"Our goal for 1970 is to cut the average amount of sleep of each person down to two hours a night—if they're lucky, that is."

Treetop Escape

Czech Family Flies to Freedom

VIENNA (UPI) — The sun had been in the sky for only a few hours when the four Czechs climbed aboard the stolen airplane and began their daring flight to freedom. Their escape, as told by Austrian authorities Friday night, took the group on a treetop level air ride across Czechoslovakia, through a hail of Communist gunfire and to safety in Austria.

It began shortly before 9 a.m. at a small military airport near Pardubitz, 60 miles east of the Czech capital of Prague.

The Czechs — three adults and a six-year-old child — ran across the runway and climbed undetected into the twin-engined "Morava" sports plane.

The only belongings they took were stuffed into one small suitcase. There was no room for friends or relatives either. The plane had only four seats. The pilot, a 26-year-old engineer named "George P." had flown the plane before as a member of the local flying club. With him was his 24-year-old wife, Ludmila, their daughter of the same name, and another man called "Dr. Mlaniv."

After a perfect takeoff, the pilot turned the plane southeast toward Vienna. He dropped to treetop level to avoid detection by constantly searching radar.

But as the plane approached the Austrian-Czechoslovakian border it was sighted by a border patrol station. The soldiers opened fire with several machine guns.

The pilot gunned the plane up to a higher altitude and flew into Austria. No one aboard the craft was hit by the gunfire.

Western Flavor Fills Day For Polyanski

By TOM MITCHELL
LETHBRIDGE (CP) — The rider got the buffalo galloping, jumped it into the back of a pickup truck, hurred across the cab roof and wound up sitting astride the hood, bat in hand.

There couldn't have been a more fitting climax to a day full of western flavor for Dmitri Polyanski, visiting Soviet deputy premier. He roared with laughter at the stunt.

Mr. Polyanski wound up a busy Friday with almost two hours at a rodeo at Fort Macleod, 25 miles west of Lethbridge. There were about 2,000 area residents at the competition and, when the deputy premier's presence was announced, they gave him a big round of applause.

WESTERN DAY
He stood up from his hardboard bench on the sloped sandy rim around the show ring and waved.

The demonstration of how to load a buffalo in a truck was the last of a series of events seen by Mr. Polyanski and members of his party. They also watched bull-dogging, calf roping, bronco riding, and a chuckwagon race with four-pony teams.

That put a unique western end to a day that had the same kind of start — an outdoor breakfast at Medicine Hat.

FARM TECHNIQUES
Then the deputy premier headed for Lethbridge, 100 miles southwest. His object was a look at the grain, cattle and vegetable farming techniques of southern Alberta.

A grain and vegetable farm near Taber was the first stop. Mr. Polyanski saw an insulated storage bin that holds 20,000 tons of potatoes and looked over the irrigation system used on the farm.

Next stop was the federal agricultural research station at Lethbridge. Here he was told of experiments in cross-breeding cattle and of steps for plant tests and disease control.

DRIVES TRACTORS
Then the deputy premier, an agricultural institute graduate, tramped the research station fields looking at various varieties of wheat and experiments to show the results of fertilization of sugar beets, another big crop in southern Alberta.

He hopped on a big tractor and disc-harrowed a section of summer fallow, then tried another tractor with a blade harrow.

After that he made brief tours of a bulk fertilizer plant and a feed plant.

Then came the drive to Fort Macleod and the rodeo.

Bastille Day Blast?

PAPEETE, Tahiti (UPI) — Six tests were expected, working up to a "super bomb" explosion in September to be witnessed by President Charles de Gaulle.

If successful, the super-bomb will be used to trigger France's first hydrogen bomb, expected to be ready for testing late next year, or early in 1968.

DE GAULLE DETERMINED
De Gaulle has made clear his determination to press forward with his go-it-alone nuclear program despite protests from nations around the world.

France and Communist China have refused to sign the 1963 partial test ban treaty with the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union. The treaty bans testing in the atmosphere, outer space and underwater.

France based its refusal on the grounds the treaty was designed to perpetuate the nuclear monopoly by the Americans and Russians.

Bumper Crop Likely

The prairie grain belt is looking forward to the fifth successive bumper crop.

June weather was "made to order". Heavy rain and warm sunshine combined in ample measure to assure development in the critical "second stage" of crop growth.

Only isolated pockets mar an over-all picture of prosperity prospects, say United Grain Growers reports from the field.

Only in the Peace River area are drought conditions threatening the fourth consecutive year of crop failure.

Alberta

Chief Harry Chonkolay's Slavey Indian band, unlike the old lady who lived in a shoe, has so much money it doesn't know what to do.

Members have $1,000,000 from oil lands at their disposal, many have built new homes, there's a $220,000 capital works program, and plans for a $50,000 community centre for the 358 band members 500 miles north of Edmonton in the Hay Lake reserve. But while they planned enthusiastically, when it came to the actual work there was a pause.

Houses are unfinished and, in the fine weather, many of the families go back to the teepee style of living.

The Indian Agency says they need leadership. The Indians say they need education.

Meanwhile there's all that money lying in Ottawa and the Slaveys can't get their eager hands on it.

The Alberta health department is getting ready to order fluoride tablets and drops for free distribution, says Dr. J. Donovan Ross, health minister. He said all local health units have been asked to tell the province what their needs might be and in what form they wish the fluoride.

As soon as a list of expected needs has been compiled, tenders will be called for supply of the material.

Mayor Vincent Dantzer said Edmonton has made a formal request for a supply of the tablets and as soon as the province makes them available, they will be distributed through all city health units.

A $230,000,000 gamble by Sun Oil Ltd., aimed at marketing the first oil from one of the world's largest reserves by the fall of 1967 is nearing payoff. A spokesman at Fort McMurray said that with 2,000 men working on a plant to extract oil from the Athabasca oil sands, this is a reasonable date for completion.

The High River Times, a weekly newspaper which has been owned by the same family for 61 years, has been sold to R. D. Tanner of High River, owner-publisher Charles Clark has announced.

Edmonton has Kluslike Days, Calgary has the Stampede Days and if Mayor Frank Sherring has his way, Lethbridge soon will have "Whoop Up Days."

Mayor Sherring is promoting the Fort Whoop Up flag as a souvenir and symbol to be used to promote Lethbridge.

One of the flags, which have been received by the city's diamond jubilee committee, has been raised above city hall.

A smaller version of the flag, on the top of a small model of the fort, would be good gimmick and souvenir for the city, the mayor said.

Mrs. Campbell Todd, a former teacher at an Indian reserve, has charged a Blackfoot family with three small children was refused accommodation at three hotels in Calgary during a rainstorm. She said the family finally sought refuge at her home.

Large corporate farms encompassing several townships may be the answer to a growing world food problem, says A. F. Totrup of Edmonton.

Such monster farms, operated by a manager employing many workers and using large-scale machinery, may make marginal farming areas productive and economic, says Mr. Totrup.

Saskatchewan

The Canadian International Aberdeen Angus show in Regina celebrating the 1967 centennial, will be held next year during the summer fair.

Z. W. Cooke, secretary of the Saskatchewan Aberdeen Angus Association, has announced the show will be sponsored by the Saskatchewan and Canadian associations.

A National Employment Service official said in Saskatoon Saskatchewan residents can look forward to lower levels of unemployment, even during winter months. W. C. Ward, manager said accelerated industrial activity, expansion of the potash industry and the general economy of the province are creating "encouraging trends toward less unemployment."

A plant capable of producing 300 telephones daily and involving an investment of $500,000 has been opened in Regina by International Telephone and Telegraph (Canada) Ltd.

It will complement similar plants, one opened in Edmonton and the other scheduled to open in Winnipeg, established by the wholly-owned subsidiary of ITT Corp. of New York.

All three prairie plants will assemble telephones but each will specialize in the manufacture of separate components.

Manitoba

A 377-foot radio tower was toppled and some half damage was reported as a series of violent thunderstorms swept across Manitoba.

Weather officials in Winnipeg said the storms developed over Lake Manitoba Friday afternoon and moved eastward during the early part of the night, losing intensity en route.

The strong winds which accompanied the storms knocked down the radio tower at Magnet, 160 miles northwest of Winnipeg, and cut communications with several other northern communities.

A Manitoba Telephone System spokesman said crews worked through the night to clear the radio site for a 300-foot portable tower being moved to Magnet from Morris, which is 38 miles south of Winnipeg. He said it was hoped telephone service could be restored in the area during the weekend.

A helicopter crash-landed at Brandon Thursday after it lost a tail rotor during a flight at the provincial exhibition where it was being used for demonstration excursions. Pilot John Bourn and four North Dakota residents were uninjured when the Bell Ranger fell 25 feet.

The chairman of the Metropolitan Corporation of Winnipeg has announced he will tender his resignation at the next council. Sixty-two-year-old Richard H. G. Barrymore said: "Mounting pressures in my personal business are preventing me from devoting myself to the affairs of the corporation."

Students from eight provinces have begun a week-long study of forestry and conservation at Hadsahville. The program at the Manitoba Forestry Association School, 50 miles east of Winnipeg, is sponsored by the Canadian Forestry Association and the National Centennial Committee.

UNIVERSITY OF VICTORIA

Recent graduates of senior secondary school who wish advice about registration at the University for the session 1966-67 are invited to make appointments by telephone with the Director of Counselling and Guidance or with the Admissions Officer.

Courses of study are available leading to the B.A., B.Sc., B.Ed., B.F.A., M.A., M.Sc., Ph.D., and to a Diploma in Fine Arts. Pre-professional courses are also available.

All students are reminded that applications for admission and re-admission must reach the Registrar not later than Monday, August 15. High school transcripts must be submitted with applications for admission by those entering for the first time. Students are urged to apply as soon as possible.

An application form and a Calendar will be sent on request. Telephone: 477-1841 (local 278).

Tall, Slab Buildings Cause Minor Gales

LONDON (LST)—For the first time, public recognition is being given to architecture's unhappiest invention: The minor gales induced by tall slab buildings.

Last week, a group of real estate agents, developers and architects agreed to put a roof on a new shopping centre at Croydon. But Croydon is just one manifestation of the problem. All over the country, authorities have been getting complaints about rough weather around city-centre complexes dominated by the broad slabs. Even on mild days, strong winds whip up dust and rubbish and drive shoppers away.

WHAT HAPPENS

How does the wind arise? It is not, as some experts have believed, just a matter of the wind funneling into narrow spaces and accelerating along the ground. (Although, with a growing inclination to raise blocks on stilts, this problem is the next developers will have to tackle.)

What happens, in fact, is the creation of a vortex or "roiling eddy." This is caused when the wind strikes the flat broad surface of a tower block, heads down towards the ground, is then turned skywards by an adjacent building, and finally whips up eddies of its own tail.

GROUND FLOW

The vortex is intensified by the ground flow: It hits the shopper from the opposite direction to the upper prevailing wind. And, because of acceleration effects, it is travelling two or three times faster.

Significantly, of all the professionals involved in building, architects were the last to be aware of the problem. Until, in the last three years, architects began to recognize its effect on human environment, it was an exercise in structural engineering.

As recently as 1963, when the first international conference covering the subject was held in England, scientists and engineers were invited. There were no architects.

Japanese Aim High

TOKYO (LAT)—Plans are being made to build a futuristic, 100-foot-high war memorial to Japanese dead of the Second World War on the American Pacific territory of Guam.

The memorial will overshadow anything in the Pacific dedicated to American war dead.

London Store to Sell To Americans on Credit

LONDON (LST)—About 200,000 high-income American families will be able to buy presents from a high-class London store and pay for them by credit card next September.

The scheme was dreamed up by Leslie Goldberg, chairman of Goringers who was looking around for ways to use the fancy store's ultra-British image, with its address on Buckingham Palace Road and its royal warrants.

Americans will be able to buy British egg-coddlers, 3 and 4 ale and cashmere sweaters and charge them on their Bank or America and Diners' Club credit cards. If it goes well, the scheme may be extended next year to include all 6,000,000 American and Diners' Card holders.

Postmarks Make Fascinating Hobby

By FAITH ANGUS

A fascinating branch of philately and one that has been neglected in the past by hobby hunters, is the collecting of postmarks.

This form of collecting would not appeal to children but older students and adults in ever increasing numbers are finding a whole new world of interest and instruction available, with out much expenditure of time or money; unless rarities are coveted.

The largest and oldest organization for postmark collectors in the United States is the Postmark Collectors Club with more than 1,000 members. They will be holding their fifth annual convention in Cleveland, Ohio, next month.

A Fourth Class Cancellation Club which formed two years ago has a steadily increasing membership. This club was formed to concentrate on the small, harder to obtain fourth class post office cancellation and rural station cancellations.

News from Czechoslovakia tells of a series of stamps called "The Indians of North America" released on the occasion of the exhibition of that name, held in the Neprstek Museum.

The first six stamps of the series in values of 20h, 30h, 40h, 60h, and 1 Kr. were produced by the rotary press system combined with photoreproduction in sheets of 50. They measure 0.9 x 1.6 inches. The seventh stamp, 1.40 Kr. was produced by four-color flat plate printing in sheets of 10. This stamp measures 0.9 x 1.5 inches.

Designs show 20h, an Indian camp with conical tent and birch bark canvas, dark blue and brick red; 30h, the tomahawk — war axe of the prairie Indians; black and orange; 40h, totem poles in village of Haida Indians, dark brown and light blue; 60h, the Great Spirit, Kitchiwah — messenger of the gods — Hopi Clan, Arizona, dark green and yellow; 1 Kr. bison hunting, violet and green; 1.20 Kr. the cakumet, pipe of peace of the Dakotas, dark blue and light violet; 1.40 Kr., a chief of the Dakotas, yellow, red blue and black.

Three first day covers have been designed by L. Sindelar and engraved by J. Goltzschmidt. The stamps were issued by the Czechoslovak Post and Telecommunications Administration.

The 2s. 6d. Rhodesian Independence stamp has been forged for propaganda purposes. Stamp Collecting U.K. reports that the original stamp has been photographed and the text altered so that the word "Illegal" appears in small letters and "Due" below "Postage."

The full text on the forgery thus reads "Illegal Independence, November 11th, 1965. Postage Due 2s. 6d. A copy of the forgery is known to have been used on a piece cancelled 'Salisbury 12 1st February 1966' with the letter R at the bottom of the date stamp.

Questions and Answers

By CHARLES E. TAYLOR

Copley News Service

Q. Please advise me what can be done for cracks in a plaster ceiling? I have tried spackle and mending, but the cracks still remain.

A. There is a patching tape on the market that will cover the crack and allow expansion and contraction. It can be painted over. Better still where the ceiling has a series of cracks, there is a canvas on the market that can be applied like wallpaper. It is treated, ready to paint. The patching tape will solve the crack problem but probably will show.

Q. We bought a home with a kitchen in which the previous owners had the island linoleum covered with plastic. Is there any way to remove this plastic film, which we think looks terrible, particularly where the previous owners had their refrigerator and stove.

We are not putting our stove and refrigerator in the same place.

A. Try paint remover to remove the plastic coating. Work with small sections at a time, removing the coating with steel wool as soon as the plastic becomes soft. When the section is clean, it is important to wash at once with a mild soap, rinse with clear water, then wipe with a dry, clean cloth. Do not allow the paint remover to remain on the linoleum any longer than absolutely necessary, as it will damage the surface.

Q. A wall area blisters between the bottom of our living room fireplace and the floor. The paint peels off first and then the plaster comes off in flakes. I had a painter take care of the problem, but after a few days the blisters formed again. He said the wall is concrete with plaster over it, and is not sure just how to handle the problem. Please advise what procedure to follow to avoid this trouble.

A. I believe your problem is caused by moisture. You do not say whether the fireplace is on an exterior wall, but I will assume this is the case.

Check the drainage at the outside base of the fireplace, being sure the grade is sloped away from the wall. Avoid planting shrubbery too close to the foundation and do not irrigate there.

When concrete walls are used as a plaster base, there is no dead air space. Moisture coming up in the concrete will get behind the paint causing it to peel. Remove the present paint, then apply a waterproof sealer before repainting the wall surface.

Q. We want to cover the concrete slab of our garage with asphalt tile, as we are converting it into an extra room. What preparation of the floor is necessary before laying asphalt tile?

A. The floor should be thoroughly cleaned of dirt, oil or grease. Wash the concrete with a solution of two pounds of trisodium phosphate to a gallon of water, using a stiff brush on stubborn areas. Rinse thoroughly. Then allow the concrete to dry thoroughly.

If there are uneven spots in the floor, a floor-leveling compound, available at building supply dealers, should be put down. The tile may buckle if the floor is not level. For actually applying the tile and what type of mastic to use, follow instructions which you can obtain from your asphalt tile dealer.

Crusade Cured Criminal

LONDON (UPI) — A 19-year-old Briton who surrendered to police and confessed to 40 burglaries has credited American evangelist Dr. Billy Graham with converting him from a life of crime.

"I know I am going to be punished," Stephen Harvey told two court magistrates Friday, vowing that "if I do have to go to prison, I will make a fresh start."

The magistrates, who heard Harvey confess to burglarizing 40 shops, were told he had been leading the life of a criminal since he was 15 and that he was thrown out of his home by his father because of his lawlessness.

Harvey's father was in the courtroom. He said he talked to his son in his cell and now wanted the youth to come back home.

"I didn't appear to be talking to the same son," the father told the magistrates. "He was completely changed. I can't grasp it."

The change, Harvey said, came last month when he attended one of Graham's nightly sermons in Earl's Court Arena during the evangelist's "crusade."

He sat with two friends in the front of the audience and was so moved by Graham's words that he "made a decision for Christ," he said.

"I decided Billy Graham had a point, and at the end I went forward. We were taken to the back where I told all about myself and how I was wanted by the police," Harvey said.

"They advised me to give myself up and make a full confession, asking God for guidance," he added.

Old Plane Ends Long Flight

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, California — Two teen-age brothers landed here Saturday to end their cross-country flight in an ancient Piper Cub airplane they rebuilt. Kera and Rinker Buck of New Vernon, New Jersey, averaged 85 miles an hour and 600 miles a day. At one point, they had to cross mountain ranges 11,000 feet high in their 23-year-old aircraft that has a ceiling of only 10,000 feet. The 17-year-old Kera does most of the piloting.

But he told the youth: "Your case has given my colleague and me room for very serious thought and consideration. It is a wonderful thing to have occurred. You had certainly started on a lifetime of crime."

First Strike Hits Atomic Complex

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — For the first time since production started 22 years ago, a strike caused a shutdown Saturday of all six nuclear reactors at the Hanford Atomic Works.

The strike, started Friday by 1,000 service employees, didn't involve firms operating the reactors but picketing curtailed work crews.

The Hanford Atomic Metal Trades Council called the strike against Battelle Northwest and Federal Support Services, two of the major contractors in the diversified Hanford operation.

Wages and union security issues are involved.

The first reactor to shut down was a new dual-purpose plant operated by General Electric Co. Waste steam from this reactor will be used to run an electric power plant, now nearing completion.

Then Douglas United Nuclear, operator of the other five reactors, announced it had first curtailed and then suspended their operation. It blamed what it called "continuing refusal" of union workers to honor a no-work-stoppage agreement.

All-Sooke Loggers Earn Reward

All Winners Kissed
In Line of Duty

Daredevil clown Mel Harper rides bull-block to the ground

By NANCY BROWN

Mr. Universe step aside—the men to set any girl's heart a-flutter are the burly loggers, who exhibited not only muscles, but skill and nerve at All Sooke Day, Saturday.

Guess who had the best time of any girl there. The Colonist reporter, who fell in the line of duty, presented the Coolest Trophy to the winning tug-of-war team, and kissed all the winners too. (See results, Page 39.)

The winners of that trophy were the scratch team, pulling under the name of Island Tug and Barge, and it included last year's handsome champion logger from Australia, Clayton Stewart.

Clayton won every heart in the loggers' events again this year, but lost the trophy for the best all round logger by half a point, and one-tenth of a second.

Just Half Point

Bob Waibel, of Sweet Home, Oregon, beat Clayton by one tenth of a second in the men's tree chopping, and when the points were tallied he was just half a point ahead of Stewart.

Family wins were in style for the community picnic.

Ardiel Wickheim took the Canadian log birling championships from his brother Jubiel, after his daughter Ingrid had won the prize as the best Sooke baby in the baby show.

Harvey Livingstone and his son Cyril showed the results of a mutual interest in log birling, as each won the class. Harvey won the Class B birling, and Cyril the novice class.

Three Bullseyes

Three bullseyes in a row in the axe throwing, were scored by Art Williams of Ladysmith.

Crowd of 12,000 watches super-loggers at work

It has been at least eight years since this feat was last performed — All Sooke Day veterans cannot recall anyone scoring the maximum 15 points.

In first round of the axe throwing, Williams tied for first place with John Miller of Roseburg, Oregon. In the throwoff, Miller threw two bullseyes, and left Williams with the almost impossible task of making three perfect throws — but he did it to the jubilation of the crowd.

A record crowd of 12,000 — 2,000 more than last year's attendance were there to watch the loggers' sports, and to gain a sunburn — a traditional prize for all who attend the 30-year-old event. SA hundred pounds of ham.

beef, which had taken 24 hours to prepare, disappeared in six. There was also a sold out sign before the end of the day at the smoked salmon stand. One thousand pounds of the best spring salmon were eaten, and 110 gallons of clam chowder were also sold.

Along with the candy flow, the popcorn, the pop, and the ice cream, spectators ate some 3,000 hot dogs. That is quite an increase over the amount of food eaten by the 20 of so families at the first All Sooke picnic 30 years ago. Both Bob Waibel, and Clayton Stewart have served notice that they intend to be back next year, to continue their battle for the title of best all-around logger.

Waibel started the day off with a shock, as he beat Stewart by a mere one tenth of a second to win the men's tree chopping in 44 and four tenths seconds. The nearest competitor, John Miller, required another two minutes to cut his tree.

Speed, Skill

In the hard hitting contest — a test of speed and skill in which every stroke counts he cut through a 14-inch alder in 19 strokes. His nearest competitor in this category was also from "down under." A New Zealander, in Canada for the first time to "see the world before some girl gets hold of me," Ian Morash took 24 strokes to cut through the butt.

Ardiel and Jubiel Wickheim kept the Canadian birling championship in Sooke, but first Jubiel had some keen competition from Art Williams, and they graduated through the 16-inch, 14-inch, and down to the 12-inch log before Williams took two dives and lost.

Then Ardiel took the other end of the log against his brother. It took a lot of rolling, reverse rolling, and rocking before the championship was resolved.

Meanwhile the crowd was treated to a fine display of fancy footwork.

Family Cup

The birling cup has been in the family since 1954.

There were 74 entries in the baby contest, and the Victoria Times cup for the best baby in the show was won by Rein Wickhemster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Wickhemster, of 2905 Glen Lake Road.

More than 200 members of the Sooke community had contributed time and effort to the event. The bank manager, Robert Ericson should have started his holidays two days ago, but he stayed behind, and took all his staff to the grounds to count the days' take, and see it deposited in the bank vault.

Only Two Cars Fail in Tour by Classics, Flivvers

By BARRY JOHNSON

It seems they really don't build them like that any more.

Of 30 automotive relics that made the grand centennial tour from New Westminster to North Kamloops and back down the Fraser Canyon to Victoria, only two were left by the wayside. (See also Page 39.)

They were a 1923 Packard driven by Franklin Price of Delta and a 1930 "baby bantam" American Austin driven by O. V. Wright of Burnaby. Both went out with burned out engine bearings.

A 1913 Napier pulled into Victoria on time Saturday after breaking down twice and missing a ferry.

Over the 1,000-mile route went such venerable ghostly names as Essex, Graham Paige, Brooks and Stanley Steamer, Cord, Whippet, De Soto, La Salle, Willys, Auburn, Franklin, Mitchell and Russell.

Gone, all gone, save for the few cherished and pampered into mint condition by the members of the Vintage Car Club of Canada who undertook the tour as part of B.C.'s centennial celebrations.

Old Fords among the adventurers brought back memories to Works Minister and Mrs. W. N. Chant who were on hand when the cars arrived here at 5:30 p.m.

"We had lots of cars through the years," Mr. Chant said. "But the one we really remember was a 1916 Model T (Ford)." They were travelling on their honeymoon near Olds, Alberta, in 1921 when they were caught in a rain storm.

"It was the kind with side curtains," said Mrs. Chant.

"Got my whole trousseau all wet."

The cars were displayed in front of the Legislative Buildings and dispersed Saturday night.

Tour officials reported, not without surprise, that not a single "souvenir" was filched from a car during the trip.

Spiritualism... Religion of Love

Religious spiritualism is not just "a belief in spirits," says a Victoria woman minister.

It's a religion of "love, light and joy."

Rev. Elsie Tingley of the Open Door Spiritualist Church says she can't understand why religious periodicals attack spiritualism as something sinister and frightening.

"Surely there's nothing wrong in trying to contact loved ones," she says.

An attractive, grey-haired woman, Mrs. Tingley admits that there is a certain amount of hocus-pocus in the movement, usually connected with ouija boards and crystal balls in darkened rooms. But she says most spiritualist churches are engaged in a sincere pursuit of truth.

The dead, she says, "have left their bodies and passed into a new dimension," where their friends can still reach them.

"With all the marvels of science around us, why is it so hard to believe? ... We have proved that they do. It's no more remarkable than sending out radio signals which can be picked up 1,000,000 miles away."

Services conducted by Mrs. Tingley begin with hymns and Bible readings, like those of other churches. Then she gives clairvoyant descriptions of dead persons and passes on messages to individuals in the congregation.

Mrs. Tingley said she is in touch with her own husband who died several months ago.

'Frosting on Cake' For Young Canadian

By MARILYN ARGUE

OTTAWA (CP) — If you're around the Canadian Embassy in Paris next fall, you may run into Michele Laperriere. Besides showing Parisians what a pretty Canadian girl looks like, she'll be doing such things as promoting Expo and arranging cultural exchanges.

The fair-haired 22-year-old is an administrative officer with the external affairs department. After two years in Ottawa she works like a fascinating, stimulating and exciting describe her job. The 34-year Paris posting is frosting on the cake. "Fantastic," she says excitedly.

A small, slim girl with big blue eyes and freckles, Michele wanted to be a teacher when she came to Ottawa in 1964. But her best friend was applying to the government and external affairs had been a high school ambition, so she went for an interview.

"After four weeks in the department I was hooked." She has worked in the information protocol, government hospitality, and cultural exchange sections and met such people as the Shah of Iran and the late Indian prime minister Shastri while helping arrange their visits to Canada.

Right now language training takes up most of her time. She isn't a student — she speaks English, French and Spanish already. Her job is arranging timetables for external affairs personnel taking courses in everything from Chinese to Swahili.

"The language schools are very patient with us. Our people are always missing two weeks because they have to go to the United Nations or leave in the middle of a course because they've been posted." People are always coming and going, and that's one of the hardest things about the job.

Janet Anders Wed In Cathedral Ceremony

Dean Brian Whitlow officiated in Christ Church Cathedral last evening for the marriage of Janet Elizabeth Anders, daughter of Mrs. W. B. Anders, Oak Bay Avenue and Mr. Ross Douglas MacBride, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. MacBride, Beach Drive.

White gladioli and carnations decorated the Cathedral for the double-ring ceremony. Mr. A. de Goutiere gave the bride in marriage.

The bride chose a floor-length gown of white crepe with bodice and sleeves of lace, cut on empire lines and with a train. A cluster of white carnations held her shoulder-length veil and she wore her mother's heirloom necklace of pearls and rubies. Red roses and stephanotis were in her bouquet.

Maid of honor, Miss Lynn Neville, bridesmatron, Mrs. R. Gunter and bridesmaid, Miss Laurie MacBride, sister of the groom, were in floor-length gowns of blue crepe. They carried red roses and white carnations and white carnations were in their hair.

The bride's maids, Heidi and Sonia Seyfort were flower girls in short frocks of blue and white Liberty print cotton. White carnations were in their bouquets.

Mr. Hugh Pise was best man and Mr. Gordon MacBride, the groom's brother, Mr. John Davis and Mr. Mike Devlin were ushers.

Summer flowers decorated the Royal Victoria Yacht Club for the reception. Mr. Alan Landels proposed the toast to the bride.

Leaving on honeymoon to California the new Mrs. MacBride changed to a tangerine, figured silk dress with white accessories. Mr. and Mrs. MacBride will make their home in Victoria until September when they will move to Toronto where Mr. MacBride will study for his doctorate at the University of Toronto.

Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. R. Gunter, Miss Carol Taiting, Burnaby; Mr. and Mrs. J. Flowers, Dawson Creek; Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Lee, Courtenay; Mr. G. Callow, Mr. and Mrs. A. Landels, Vancouver.

The forthcoming marriage is announced between Barbara Joan Heisterman, daughter of Mrs. Charles G. Heisterman of 1647 Hampshire Road and the late Mr. Heisterman, and Flying Officer Gerald Gordon Mark, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon E. Mark of Ash Street, Winnipeg. The wedding will be held in St. Mary's Church, at 2:30 p.m., on Saturday, August 13. Archbishop H. E. Sexton, assisted by Rev. Angus Cameron will perform the marriage ceremony. The bride is a 1966 graduate of the school of Dental Hygiene, University of Alberta, and her fiancé is a graduate of Royal Military College, Kingston.—(Chapman Photography).

20th Biennial Convention

Victoria has once again been invaded by women . . . Here for the 20th biennial convention of the Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, which starts today at the Empress Hotel, are 600 women from all across Canada. A special guest at the five-day affair is Lady Barbara Littlewood, who came by air from London, England, to attend in her capacity as president of the International Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. Lady Littlewood will be the guest speaker at a banquet honoring outgoing officers on Tuesday.

Many of the delegates arrived Saturday and were on hand for the start of registration in the hotel's main lobby, later enjoying an informal soiree for early arrivals in the president's suite.

Miss Nazla Dane of Toronto, national president, will preside over the convention which is only the second national one to be held in Victoria since the federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs was formed in Winnipeg in 1930. The first convention here was held at the Empress Hotel in 1942 when Miss Margaret Clay, retired city librarian, was national president.

At that time 60 members representing clubs across Canada were registered. This year's convention will see more than 600 delegates and observers attending from every one of the 10 provinces.

Among the prominent Canadian women attending and registered for this outstanding gathering in British Columbia's centennial year are Senator Muriel Macquenn Ferguson of Fredericton, Elsie Gregory MacGill of Toronto, Canada's only woman aeronautical engineer and a national past president; Miss Jo Dauphinee of Vancouver, the federation's second national president and now in her 90th year; and the first honorary secretary-treasurer, Miss Mary Ethel Thornton of Winnipeg.

Hostess groups for the convention are the Victoria and Oak Bay Business and Professional Women's Clubs led by their presidents, Miss Elizabeth Clement and Miss Muriel Campbell. British Columbia's provincial president, Mrs. Ivy Baston of Powell River, is also here to assist in hostess duties. Chairmen of the local planning committee are Miss Elizabeth Forbes and Miss Ruth Adams, both past presidents of the Victoria Club.

Program Highlights

- Official opening ceremonies of the 20th biennial convention of the CFBPWC will be held this evening in the Crystal Ballroom of the Empress Hotel.
- Business sessions will start at 9 a.m. on Monday.
- A workshop luncheon is planned for Tuesday followed by a clinic session arranged around the theme, "Ideas and Membership Go Together." The panel will be composed of members from the Manitoba clubs headed by their provincial president, Miss Margaret Price of St. James.
- There will be a picnic supper at Butchart Gardens on Wednesday evening and those attending will stay on for the variety show and illumination of the gardens.
- Registered convention delegates and observers will be entertained at Government House Thursday afternoon.
- The five-day affair will wind-up with a banquet Thursday evening in the Crystal Ballroom with Hon. Robert W. Bonner, Attorney-General of British Columbia, as guest speaker. Installation of new officers will follow.

A former president of the Victoria BPW Club, Miss Margaret Clay presided over the first national convention in the city in 1942 in her capacity as national president. She was vice-president of the International Federation from 1953 to 1956. — (Campbell Studio)

Presiding over the convention is Miss Nazla Dane of Toronto, national president. Miss Dane is director of the educational and women's division of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association.

Senator Muriel Macquenn Ferguson of Fredericton, N.B., is attending at the 20th biennial convention of the CFBPWC being held here until Thursday evening. The senator is a national past president.

Mrs. R. B. Winter, a past president of the Chatham, Ont., BPW Club, is in Victoria for the 20th biennial convention of CFBPWC Clubs.

A registered delegate from the Charlottetown BPW Club attending the convention here is Miss Dorothy Cullen.

Ready to participate in the five-day convention are Miss Katherine Creelman, president of the Fredericton, N.B., Business and Professional Women's Club, and Miss Maude McKee, past service member.

Doing The Town

with DOROTHY FRASER

A wonderful world of books at The Book Nook . . . Books, we firmly believe, are one of the most potent influences in any child's life . . . Books of genuine literary worth and visual beauty instill appreciation of such qualities by a process of mental osmosis . . . Having made which profound statement we hasten to tell you that we've just seen a big selection of fabulously beautiful children's books in The Book Nook . . . that thoroughly delightful new book store just recently opened in Centennial Square . . . No room for mediocrity here . . . every children's book is chosen with informed and unerring taste . . . for quality of content and imaginativeness of artwork . . . And such utterly charming illustrations you never did see! . . . Take "The World of the Bee," for example . . . completely delightful! . . . "Fobaboo and the Lion," translated from the French of prize-winning writer Rene Guillot . . . The Allison Uttley series of Grey Rabbit stories (told friends to people brought up in England) . . . Another series of beautiful little books by Joan Walsh England . . . "Album of Horses," a truly magnificent book written and illustrated by a duo of authorities on that noble beast . . . to name but a few! . . . If books excite you and delight you, lose no time in visiting . . . The Book Nook, 10 Centennial Square, 388-0813.

In silhouette, the narrow look will prevail, come fall. Many dress-cost costumes . . . the coat is usually in color, with geometric or paisley pattern, worn over a simply-cut dress in solid shade, collarless, sleeveless and belted.

"Merrymaker" group makes attractive bedroom . . .

Let's say you'd like a new bedroom suite . . . maybe for your child's room or the extra bedroom . . . and don't want to spend a fortune on it . . . but neither do you want one of those ordinary-looking suites . . . well, we've just the answer for you . . . It's the Merrymaker group you'll find now at Home Furniture . . . This is the most attractive bedroom furniture we've seen in a long time . . . Well-made, well-designed hardwood in six different colors . . . red, green, pale blue, ivory, nutmeg and black . . . beautifully decorated with gold banding and floral design (the ivory or blue would look charming in a little girl's room) . . . This furniture has a lot to appeal to you . . . It also costs a lot less money than most good bedroom furniture (24-piece suite for less than $200) . . . Each piece is sold separately, and apart from double, single, and four-poster canopy beds, there are desks, hutch bookcases, dressing tables, corner pieces, chests, etc. . . . In fact you could fill up a whole wall of a room with various pieces from this grouping . . . take it around the whole room, if you like, thus providing combined sleeping and living quarters . . . Did we mention that you can get bunk beds in this grouping too? . . . and the regular beds have either panel or spindle headboards. Really distinctive! . . . Go see the Merrymaker group at . . . Home Furniture Company, 825 Fort St., 382-5138.

This fall, coat silhouettes by top American designers range from skimpy to voluminous, but the big favorite is the tent, a throwback to the pyramid of 20 years ago . . . In everything from raincoats to evening coats, "Vivid colors and unusual fabrics prevail.

Outfits to travel in . . . to live in . . .

When a dress . . . with wear inside it . . . sits in a plane all the way from Vancouver to Amsterdam . . . and emerges without a wrinkle, looking bandbox fresh . . . that, friends, is a dress to buy your money on and cherish . . . The experience we've just described actually did happen to a Liberty wool challis dress purchased from Wilson's . . . Some models of the same have just arrived . . . two-piece suits . . . nicely tailored of paisley printed wool challis . . . prevailing shades of brown, berry tones or green . . . There's a dress with jacket . . . little sleeves, scoop neck and A-line skirt . . . very gracious looking . . . smart jacket with frog closing . . . In stain-resistant colors of green, blue or copper . . . A very pretty one-piece dress in blue and green print fashioned on princess lines with square neck and wool piping trim . . . Didn't see it on, but we're told that this particular dress is very flattering through the bustline . . . Liberty challis is literally uncrushable . . . a firm and light-weight . . . has all the properties you can wear it all year round because it's seldom too warm . . . We honestly think every well-dressed woman should have a challis suit or dress in her wardrobe! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Douglas St., 383-1177.

Acid perfumes and cosmetics are pearls' worst enemies. Aside from dulling the pearls, they seep into the string and weaken it. If you wear pearls often, resting them once a year.

Heading beautifully into summertime . . .

All right, we admit it, we're guilty too . . . of sometimes running around town without a hat, that is . . . when we know full well we'd look a lot better wearing one . . . But certainly in all our lives there are numerous occasions when a chapeau is de rigueur . . . and the prettier it is, the better! . . . One "for instance" is the forthcoming Government House garden party when we'll all want to look our grandest . . . Weddings and luncheons and teas . . . which will be plentiful as confetti for the next few months . . . We were put in mind of all this festive hat-wearing when we visited Miss Fritzi's the other day and browsed in the millinery department . . . Such pretty and chic and imaginative summer hats! . . . Lots of mohairs and lacy straws . . . one white hat made entirely of row upon row of narrow ruffled lace . . . There are whites and pastels . . . flowered and tailored . . . small and neat, or brimmed and provocative . . . A couple of Christian Dior in black mohair and organza petals would look delightful with a silk suit or gay print dress . . . There are some lovely organdies . . . fine white Panamas . . . airy ball-bunnies . . . A light, airy look is characteristic of nearly all these hats . . . (and even if the temperature doesn't feel much like summer, YOU will, in a summery hat from . . . Miss Fritzi Millinery & Fashions, 1617 Douglas St., 388-1181.

At the recent Dior New York press showings, mannequins wore Dynel hairpieces . . . coiled in big poufs at the back of the neck . . . worn hanging down as one or two pigtails in back, or one pigtail slung over a shoulder. The pigtails were decorated with flowers, or bows.

Venetian lanterns here again . . .

You may not own a palazzo in Venice . . . but you can bring a hint of such continental flavor to your home right now . . . By acquiring one of Sydney Reynolds' famous Italian lanterns . . . A new shipment is just in . . . for which we happen to know a number of local people have been waiting more or less patiently . . . These lanterns, made in Venice or blown glass in a variety of shapes (round, oval, pear-shaped, etc.) come in lovely colors . . . They're light fixtures which would look delightful in hallways, patios, dining rooms, bedrooms . . . anywhere in the house, in fact . . . Extremely attractive and quite inexpensively tagged at $18, $20 and $25 . . . Some discerning people have already replaced all their ordinary light fixtures with lanterns . . . Also new from Venice . . . wrought iron lamp fixtures with etched glass panes . . . Can be hung from the ceiling, or from brackets on the wall . . . especially nice for hallways and dens . . . And switching from lamps to china . . . here's something else you may have been waiting for . . . Johnson's Hunting Pattern "Tally Ho" . . . which has finally arrived after being held up by the shipping strike . . . Open stock dinnerware with a variety of different scenes associated with an English hunt . . . Very nice indeed! . . . Sydney Reynolds Ltd., 801 Government St., EV 3-3031.

Daffy definitions: Bathing suit: something girls get as much out of as possible. Blondes: the most outstanding contribution chemistry has given the world.

Viyella now available at Saba Bros. . . .

For a long time you haven't been able to buy Viyella at Saba's . . . but now you can . . . and everybody concerned is very happy about it . . . We really don't need to expand on this versatile fabric except to remind you that nothing washes as well . . . It doesn't shrink, and comes out of the washer, time after time, as soft and colorful as new . . . Saba's have a complete stock of Viyella, in plain colors, floral prints and authentic tartans . . . It's 36 inches wide, and is priced from $2.98 to $3.98 a yard . . . and there's just no end to the garments you can make from it . . . from children's clothes to smart things for yourself and your husband . . . A new shipment of wool challis prints from Liberty of London is also on display now in Saba's fabric department . . . There are some beautiful paisleys and floral patterns . . . mostly in darker colors suitable for fall clothes . . . Challis is marvelous for dresses, blouses, dressing gowns . . . combines lightness with just enough warmth . . . This Liberty challis is 36" and priced at $5.98 and $6.98 a yard . . . Just a reminder: the July clearance sale of Saba's imported fabrics started last Thursday and will be carrying on all next week . . . a wonderful opportunity to pick up French and Swiss pure silks and rayons at prices as low as $2.59 . . . so be sure to visit . . . Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Francis Sidlick are shown leaving St. Matthew's Church in a horse and buggy for the reception at the Chez Marcel, following their wedding Friday evening. The bride is the former Mary Lucille Merriman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alec R. Merriman, 1184 Goldstream Avenue, and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sidlick, 2547 Blanshard Street. Driver is Mr. Gordon Maycock, a leading member of the U-Tree Highlanders horsemen's club for which the newlyweds served as a president-secretary team for two years.—(Robin Clarke).

Dear Ann Landers: I am a girl who is twelve years old. My problem is six years old. She is my sister.

My mother made a rule a long time ago that I have to put my little sister to bed. This means help her get her clothes off, see that she puts them away, make sure she has a good bath, and then tell her a bedtime story and lie down on the bed with her until she falls asleep.

Sometimes all this takes two hours, because after the bedtime story she wants to talk a while. I have to tell her a story, and then she falls asleep. Well, I am pretty sick of it. There is some good stuff on TV between 7 and 9 p.m. and I have telephoned to do. Also, I like to read myself. I told my mother that I can't be down with my sister until she gets married and it's time she got to dreamland on her own.

Please be on my side and help me. — TROUBLE IN CORNING, N.Y.

Dear Trouble: You sound like a very nice girl and I am going to try to help you — part way. I think you should get your little sister ready for bed, and it's lovely of you to do all the things you mentioned. BUT, after the bedtime story you ought to say "Good night" and leave the room. A six-year-old girl should not need someone to sweetheart's ex-wife seated in the front row with the other members of the family. She was dressed in black from head to toe and appeared to be the chief mourner.

Is it proper for an ex-wife to show up at the funeral of her ex-husband? Shouldn't she stay away if she knows there is another woman in the picture? — REPLY REQUESTED

Dear Reply: There's no reason an ex-wife should not attend the funeral of her ex-husband if she wishes to. But she should not be decked out in widow's weeds nor should she be seated with the family unless she is invited.

In Red China

By VEEGIL BERGER

PEKING (Reuters) — "Do you know each other?" asked the registrar at one of Peking's marriage offices.

The couple sitting in front of his desk replied with a firm "Yes."

The question was not as odd as it would seem to most Westerners.

Only since the Communists have been in power during the last 17 years have reforms been introduced to abolish child betrothals and "feudal" marriages arranged by relatives or professional matchmakers.

For centuries, while these methods were in regular use, boy often did not meet girl until the betrothal ceremony or marriage.

Now both parties must agree to the match and present themselves to the registrar together.

In the Peking East City district office, the registrar was a neat and youthful-looking woman dressed in the cotton jacket and baggy blue pants worn by almost everyone in Peking.

MARRIAGE LAW

She asked the couple their ages, whether they knew the stipulations of the marriage law, and whether either of them had previously been married.

The bridegroom had been married before so the registrar questioned him about his divorce and how his children were being cared for.

After each answer, she turned to the bride and asked "Do you know this?"

PROTECT RIGHTS

All this is part of the Communists' drive to protect the rights of women. The marriage law of 1950 guarantees equal rights for both sexes, the protection of interests of women and children, and an end to the concubine system.

The Communists have made considerable efforts to uproot those traditional customs which gave women an inferior place in society, though they admit this has proved difficult in some rural areas.

Chinese couples must report to the district marriage office with a letter from their employers or local residents' association, certifying that they qualify for marriage and are in good health.

After asking a few questions, the registrar enters their name in a list and presents each of them with an identical certificate, with a red flag printed on it. The certificate simply gives the names of the two people, declares that they are willing to marry each other and that they are married "in accordance with the marriage law, after examination."

Young Waitress Takes Order From Boy

Kitte Turmell Letters

Judge Quality, Not Quantity When Going Out on Dates

"Dear Kitte Turmell: I have a very troubling problem. I hardly ever get dates, while other girls have dates twice a week.

"I am not too shy or very forward, but it seems to me that the boys I have an interest in do not want to be bothered by me. Please help by answering two questions for 'Troubled':

Q: "How can I let a boy know that I want to be asked for a date?"

A: Show a friendly interest in him—and in mutual interests that might prompt him to invite you to go out for dancing, or to see shows, or hear the type of music you both like. Never hint for a date—just wait for him to do the asking on impulse, without prodding. Let him know you have a lively interesting life and are not just sitting home, pining for phone calls.

Q: "What should I do to get more dates?"

A: Make the most of those that come your way. Ask girls, who date often, for tips on their techniques. Invite boys, who show some interest in you, to girl-bird dances and home-parties. Don't try too hard for popularity. One date, that both enjoy, can mean as much as more as many dates. Judge by the quality not the quantity.

"Dear Kitte Turmell: Bew. As I have a problem. I am 15 years old and look like I'm about 12 or 13. So, all the boys I've ever liked have been younger, but they look older than I do.

"The boys have a nickname for me 'Ugly.' This hurts me very much. I know I'm not cute, but I can't change my looks. I am short and skinny and have tried everything. I'm so discouraged I don't know what to do. I would be grateful for any help you could give me. 'Inhappy'."

"Dear Inhappy": Do what you can to improve your looks—with colorful clothes that are designed for your small size. Eat properly—enjoy between-meal treats, too, to bring you up to normal weight for your height. Firm well; get a new hair-do and lively lipstick—color that tones in with your complexion.

Then forget your looks, and work on improving your personality, so you can build poise and confidence.

Ignore the rude ones who try to tease you and in a round-about way pay attention to you—by calling you "Ugly." If you really want to squelch such a nickname, reply, with a wry grin, "Hey, Good-Looking!" or "I'll bet you say that to all the beautiful girls!"

Teen-Ager

What's this girl's job? She has the insight of a psychologist... the ability of a salesman... the charm of a hostess... the techniques of an actor.

On yes, she makes good money, too.

Did you guess? She's a waitress, and a top one.

She's not the kind that travellers grumble about—too shy or scared or untrained to do well. This girl makes it fun to eat out, and her tips roll in. What's more she's been selected by her employers for a career-training course in food-service work.

You can profit by her example. Jean Ross of the Nova Scotia Department of Trade and Industry tells how. She's a author.

Exercise Figure's Friend

By Reba & Bonnie Churchill

Exercise can be your figure's best friend. Corrective workouts properly performed, smooth bulges into curves, turn flab to firm, and give bony areas new full-out proportions. To contour bust and streamline torso, kneel on floor, grasping a yardstick or broom handle overhead. Slowly bend to the right, trying to touch stick to the ground. Alternate sides. Repeat 10 times; gradually increase to 20.

This stretch routine also offers multi-benefits. It fights double chin, lifts bust, and activates back, waist and limb muscles. Lie on stomach, clasp hands behind neck, and raise both chest and legs off floor. If you can lift limbs at least six inches you're doing well. If not, keep practicing. Begin with five "elevations"; increase to 12.

Now, let's turn our attention to the legs. Lie on your back with feet propped against wall. Place an exercise stick under balls of feet, and roll wand as high as possible up the flat surface. If legs are thin, when you reach maximum height, press firmly against board. Hold contraction three seconds; then relax. Try four times. If under-pinnings are heavy, omit contraction, and concentrate on performing roll-up at an accelerated pace 15 times.

GOING ON VACATION?

Take along plenty of REDKEN'S AMINO-PON SHAMPOO

AMINO-PON is the protein based, acid balanced shampoo with so many uses.

As a Shampoo—AMINO-PON replenishes lost proteins and restores the hair and scalp to its normal slightly-acid condition. (Nine out of ten other shampoos are alkaline.)

In the Bath—Again AMINO-PON nourishes the skin with proteins and restores an acid-mantle as a protection against bacteria.

After the Pool—AMINO-PON acidifies, and stops damage done to the hair and skin by chlorine and other chemicals.

For Washing Fine Woolens—Just as the proteins in AMINO-PON help to beautify your hair, they also serve to restore lustre to your fine woolens. Try it. You will be amazed.

AMINO-PON is just one of the beneficial REDKEN products available at the Margo Beauty Studio. You can buy it ready to use, or in concentrate form for easy packing.

The Week in Records

Payola Probe Widespread

By MARY LEE BURROWS

A determined investigation has been started just recently in Southern California into the widespread use of payola among the radio stations. Payola is money or some other form of payment given by an artist or an artist's backer to a station to encourage the playing of their record.

This is why a record survey is not in all cases a true indication of record popularity. Payola is not illegal in many areas.

Barry Mann, one member of the song-writing duo who wrote Soul and Inspiration, We Gotta Get Out of This Place, Kicks, and You've Lost That Lovin' Feeling, has turned singer. His first single is called Angelica.

Paperback Writer by the Beatles failed to hit No. 1 on the Top 100 in its initial week. It is the first single to fail to do so in three years and eight releases.

Hit singles: Number one in Victoria this week is Wild Thing by The Trogs.

Hit LP's: The best-selling album is Yesterday and Today by the Beatles and Midnight Ride by Paul Revere and the Raiders.

What's happening: The best of the up'n comers is Lady Jane, Mother's Little Helper by the Rolling Stones.

Proper Freeway Use Safe

Freeways are a blessing to the holidaying motorists. They give safe travel at relatively high speeds with a minimum of mental stress.

And to make the travel safer, the traffic safety committee of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce suggests several points to keep in mind:

A freeway is a divided highway for through traffic with full control of access and generally with grade separations at intersections. It eliminates annoyances, hazards of left turns, blind intersections, dangerous curves, and distractions close to the roadway. It gives safe travel at relatively high speeds with a minimum of mental stress.

PLAN YOUR TRIP Know where you enter onto the freeway and where you leave the freeway.

CHECK YOUR AUTO The freeway lanes. This is very dangerous to you and others. Watch for the DO NOT ENTER signs and obey them.

● SPEED Maintain a speed consistent with other vehicles in your lane. Speeds faster or slower are potentially dangerous.

● SPACING Maintain proper spacing—that is, one car length per 10 miles per hour.

● CHANGING LANES Watch constantly traffic around you. Signal all your movements well in advance. Check the "blind spot" before altering course.

● EMERGENCIES A stopped car on or near the freeway pavement is extremely hazardous. A ruined tire is preferable to a serious collision. In case of a breakdown, pull

Russian Fleet Grows Weekly

SALEM, Ore. (AP)—Reports that the Russian fishing fleet off the Oregon and Washington coast is growing by about 15 vessels a week was verified Friday in a report to Gov. Mark Hatfield's office. A member of his staff and state fish commission biologists spotted 118 ships scattered from the mouth of the Columbia to a point 80 miles north Thursday. Last week 105 ships were sighted.

ASK RITHET'S

Q. What is my position if I lend my car to a friend and he is involved in an accident?

A. The Motor Vehicle Act states... The owner of a motor vehicle shall be responsible for any violation of this act, the Highway Act or any Municipal Act, by any person entrusted by the owner with the possession of that vehicle. So, normally, you and your friend are covered by your policy.

CNR Ending New York Run

MONTREAL (UPI)—Montreal to New York passenger service will be discontinued effective Monday, Canadian National Railways has announced.

The discontinuation of service follows notification from the Boston and Maine Railroad that its application to the United States Interstate Commerce Commission to discontinue service between Windsor, Vt., and Springfield, Mass., had been granted.

In Simplest Terms

Law and the Driver

Many motorists are not aware of the clauses of the B.C. Motor Vehicle Act. For their benefit, the Victoria Chamber of Commerce traffic safety committee has prepared a list of traffic regulations with explanations where needed.

Not included are clauses which refer specifically to professional drivers.

Section 149(1) When Passing on Right Permitted.

The driver of a vehicle shall not cause or permit the vehicle to overtake and pass upon the right of another vehicle, except:

- when the vehicle overtaken is making a left turn or its driver has signalled his intention to make a left turn; or
- when on a laned roadway there is one or more than one unobstructed lane on the side of the roadway on which he is permitted to drive; or
- upon a one-way street, or upon a highway on which traffic is restricted to one direction of movement, where the roadway is free from obstructions and is of sufficient width for two or more lanes of moving vehicles.

Comment

This section prohibits passing on the right of an overtaken vehicle except under certain circumstances:

- when the overtaken vehicle is either making a left turn or is signalling intention to turn left;
- when driving on a laned highway where there are two or more lanes for travel in the same direction. If the right hand lane is free of any obstruction then it is permissible to pass on the right;
- when driving on a one-way street it is quite permissible to pass on the right, providing the roadway is of sufficient width for two or more lanes of traffic.

Courtroom Parade

Two Fined, Suspended As Impaired Drivers

Nineteen-year-old Alan Sim smashed into a parked car on stopped on the wrong side of Kingsley Place early Saturday morning to talk to two girls.

He pulled away when a police car approached. He was stopped and found to be unsteady on his feet.

Sim of Bamberton Beach pleaded guilty in central magistrate's court Saturday to impaired driving.

He was fined $300 and his licence was suspended for six months. Court was told he had a breathalyzer reading of 16 per cent.

Rodney Wilson gave a breathalyzer reading of 18 per cent three hours after he

Winning Contract

By HOWARD SCHENKEN and RICHARD L. FREY

BRIDGE QUIZ

The requirements for a positive response to a forcing two bid can be a cause of mis-

Both vulnerable, your partner opens two hearts. What do you bid?

can be used in the understanding between casual partners. Partner will usually forgive you for giving a positive response without what he regards as the proper point count, but he won't forgive you for responding in a suit that is weaker than he considers proper. So look for a strong suit to respond on. In our view, Q-J-9-X is the minimum strength for a two-level response; K-J-9-X for a three-level response. If you don't hold such a suit, it is better to bid no trump even if you hold the values for a positive bid.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

a. Three hearts. Nothing would induce us to make a three-level bid in this empty club suit, yet with an ace and a total of eight points—nine, if we promote the honor in partner's suit—we owe partner an encouraging response. A doubleton honor is adequate support for a two bid.

b. Two spades. This suit is rock-bottom for a positive response to an opening two bid. But two spades is the most economical bid you can make and in terms of high-card points you have a little to spare. It is standard to give a positive response on as few as seven points provided they include a quick trick. If you do not have a quick trick, you need at least eight or nine.

c. Two trump. Although we have enough points for a positive response, a three-level bid in a minor suit would be asking for trouble. With two points more, the solution to the dilemma would be a jump to three in trump.

d. Two spades. We know that partner is entitled to expect a point or two more, but we are reluctant to risk an easy chance of showing such a fine spade suit especially when this can be done without raising the level of the bidding.

e. Three no trump. When you are responding to one bid; any five-card suit is biddable. But in responding to a two bid, the best principle is not to bid bad suits on good hands. When partner opens a two bid and you are fortunate enough to have a positive or near-positive response, the only real question is which slam to play in. And you don't help to answer that question by bidding a moth-eaten suit.

Vancouver Gem Junk Stops Traffic

VANCOUVER (CP)—It's not often anybody can get excited about junk. But that's what Ida Thery has done, and with considerable success.

Miss Thery, a Vancouver dress and hat designer, has created what a fashion editor has called "a collection of fabulous fake jewelry" out of odds and ends she had lying about.

The designer calls the jewelry pure primitive—"sculptures in papier mache." Earrings come out light as a feather, large and in exotic colors as well as black and white.

"I just looked around at all the bits and pieces I'd been saving for years and decided to do something about it," says Miss Thery.

The reasonably-priced jewelry is featured at a boutique in suburban Oakridge and has been a real traffic-stopper.

Miss Thery, who used to design all the hats for Vancouver's Theatre Under The Stars and often appears on television, is already looking ahead to fall. She has some ideas of using the bits and pieces of tweed and leather she has in her apartment.

And at the moment she is turning out a mad collection of sun hats for the safe boutique. Her junk jewelry is considered right for hostess wear and resort clothes.

Pharoahs Still Buried?

WASHINGTON (AP)—A bizarre, international scientific experiment has been announced to test a theory that the burial chambers of the Pharaohs of Egypt have remained hidden in the pyramids for 4,500 years.

Tools of the atomic age will be used as scientists seek literally to x-ray the second pyramid of Chephren at Giza in the United Arab Republic to determine whether undiscovered burial chambers exist in the mass of stone.

The experiment, a joint venture of the United States and the U.A.R., is designed to prove or disprove "one of the most persistent beliefs of archaeology," the Atomic Energy Commission said.

It holds that the Egyptian monarchs, wary of grave robbers, and anxious to preserve their bodies for immortality, ingeniously planned their pyramids in such a way as to mislead future generations into believing that the tombs already had been sacked.

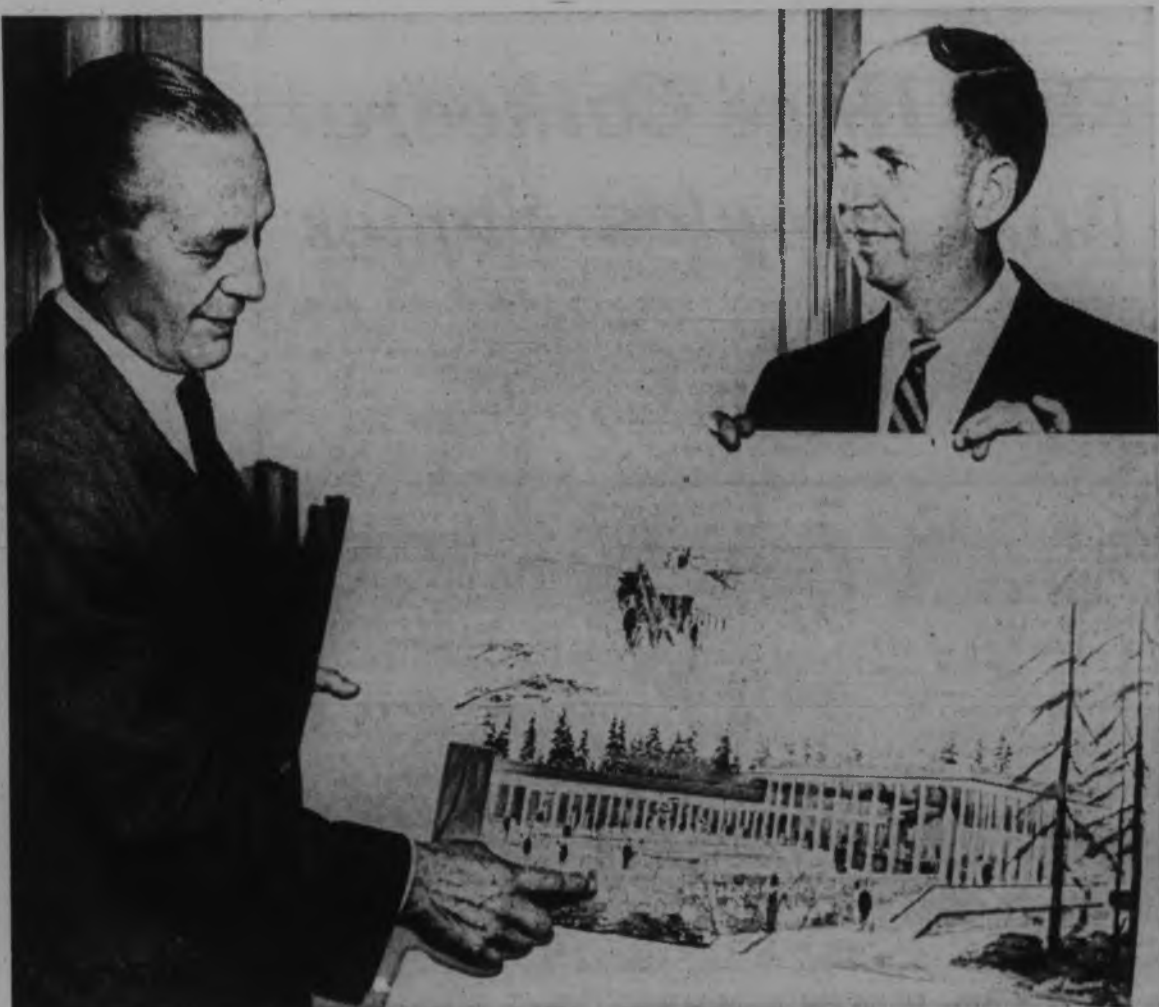

The experiment, to begin in a few months, is expected to last about 18 months, and will cost $250,000. The equipment will be developed at the University of California at Berkeley.

Gielgud Beats Stanislavsky

By PATRICK O'NEILL

Life in the country is quiet, mystic, sunny, fresh utterly boring existence.

This theme has been played often, by such diverse writers as Thomas Hardy, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Sinclair Lewis.

But there are problems in putting boredom on the stage and the main problem is keeping the boredom from seeping over the footlights and working its way row by row through the audience.

To beat this problem, Tennessee Williams used sex Anton Chekhov used laughter.

In his play Ivanov, Chekhov tried to temper the boredom of country life with robust humor of the secondary characters.

It was this quality that Chekhov felt was lost in the productions of his plays including Ivanov, by the Moscow Art Theatre.

He called himself a writer of comedies turned into tragedies by the famous acting company.

In 1904, the year of his death he wrote in a letter, "One thing I can say Stanislavsky has ruined my play for me!"

TRIED TO RESTORE

John Gielgud, in his recent Broadway production of Ivanov, has tried to restore the humor and lightness of what could easily be a sombre production.

The story tells of a man who can't bear the company of his dying wife. The fact that she is dying makes the play a problem of human relationships still acute long after Chekhov's death.

PROBABLY BETTER

The production directed by Gielgud, has been recorded by RCA Victor (VDM 109).

Ivanov probably plays better on wax than on stage. Most of the action is conveyed in the voice.

Some excellent voices are featured in the production headed by Gielgud and Vivien Leigh as Ivanov and his wife.

Their confrontation scene when they come to terms with each other and themselves is a brilliant piece of bitter, understated acting.

Nebraskan on Venus

Indian Tours Galaxy in Flying Saucer

By RUSSELL NEILSEN

RENO (UPI) — An Indian chief in full regalia told Friday how a space ship took him on a four-year flight to the edge of the galaxy.

Frank B. Standing Horse of Perris, Calif., told the Amalgamated Flying Saucer Club of America convention he touched the moon, Mars, Clarion, and Venus, but spent most of his time in Orion, which he described as a planet on the outer edge of our galaxy and which was inhabited by a super-modernistic society.

He said his journey began July 12, 1959, near Sapulpa, Okla., at a spot where he was clearing an area for a church camp. Standing Horse, who said he saw his first flying saucer in 1949 and had sighted 14 unidentified flying objects since, said a spacecraft 250 feet in diameter and 28 feet high landed during the night.

He said he talked with the crew of three men, who "looked like anyone else," and decided to go away with them "because it was a new experience for me."

Once aboard, he said, he met a beautiful lady 6 feet 4 inches tall with long black hair and blue eyes. She fed him and tucked him into bed after giving him an Orion-style kiss — three finger taps on the cheek "which was no fun."

They landed on Mars at a building "made of rock from our moon." After eating earth-style food, they flew to the moon where he saw "people, buildings, animals, snow and ice." Then it was on to Venus for a landing in a cloudburst and a stay of 80 minutes.

Clarion was next. He didn't say much about that stop "which lasted only 28 minutes," but on Venus he said he saw a car powered by electromagnetic force and driven by a man from North Platte, Neb.

He didn't identify his countryman.

At Orion, there were beautiful buildings including churches, and life was "so different I just couldn't tell about it all here." He did remember eating delicious berries so big three of them would fill a quart jar, and said details could be heard on tape recording available at $15 a tape.

"I wanted to stay but they wouldn't let me," he said. "I asked why they brought me to Orion and they said it was so I might know the mighty works of Creation. They said we should stop shooting off atomic bombs, because it disturbed them."

About 1,000 persons are attending the three-day convention which ends Sunday. They say displays which included pictures purporting to show flying saucers and heard speakers tell of their experiences with ships and men from outer space.

Bail $25,000

MONTREAL (CP)—Vincenzo

(Vic) Cotroni, 56, a Montreal businessman, was released on bail of $25,000 when he was arraigned in Criminal Court Friday on a charge of offering a $25,000 bribe to an RCMP sergeant.

Cotroni is alleged to have offered Sgt. Gerard Barbeau the money June 21, when the latter visited Cotroni's suburban Repentigny home to arrest Joseph Vincent Asaro, 53, of New York City.

At the arraignment, Myer Gross, lawyer for Cotroni, asked for bail on the grounds that Cotroni has lived for many years in Montreal where he had business connections and his own home.

"There is no doubt that he will be in court when his presence is required," Mr. Gross said.

Gabriel Lapointe, chief Crown prosecutor, said that although the offence did not entail any violence, it was considered a most serious one. The amount of the alleged bribe also was "an imposing one."

Asaro was being sought by the FBI for breach of parole after serving less than two years of a 16-year term for armed robbery in 1963. He is being held in Bordeaux jail awaiting deportation.

More Hired Killers With Commutations Predicts Policeman

MIDDLETON N.S. (CP) —

President James Mackay of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police said Friday if the federal cabinet's policy of commutation is continued it could mean a greater influx of criminals "who kill for pay."

Chief Mackay, head of Toronto's metropolitan police force, told the 18th Annual Association of Chiefs of Police meeting he was pleased with the recent vote to retain the death penalty "but it will be a hollow victory for law enforcement officials just as long as the policy of commutation is continued.

"As long as the federal cabinet continues to commute the death sentence for vicious killers, the law is impotent and ineffective," Chief Mackay said.

"It is my sincere belief that the majority of citizens throughout Canada continue to view these life sentences for murders with alarm."

Chief Mackay outlined a program he said is necessary in a "stepped up offensive against crime across Canada," including amalgamation of small police forces, setting up of a central intelligence organization on a federal level and a permanent federal crime commission.

Sterna Webster, president of the Maritime association and chief of the Charlottetown police force, commended the federal government for retaining capital punishment.

Chief Webster also said the establishment of a crime index section of the RCMP at Halifax fills a long-felt need by police departments in the Atlantic region.

Coquiltam Slaying

Several Sought On Son's Story

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police to the killer's identity, picked up Saturday for questioning in connection with the slaying of Mrs. Anna Whitty, 28-year-old housewife.

Police said they have a vague description of the killer from the woman's 15-year-old son Murray, but said it is hard to accept it as being completely reliable.

DON'T KNOW

Just how much he can get from the boy, we really don't know," an RCMP spokesman said.

The nude body of the suburban Port Moody housewife was discovered Friday in a water-filled ditch in bushland in Coquiltam. She had been sexually assaulted and strangled sometime Thursday.

Her son was found wandering alone on a nearby road Friday morning.

KNIFE USED?

Although Mrs. Whitty's body bore no signs that any weapon was used, the police spokesman said Murray suggested that his mother had been threatened with a knife before she was strangled.

Police were using a police shovel Saturday to sweep mud from the ditch in which Mrs. Whitty's body was found. They hope they will find some clue

Saigon Army Fires Five 'Soft' Generals

SAIGON (LAT) — Five Vietnamese generals who failed to effectively suppress Buddhist-led anti-government defiance in the northern provinces from March to mid-June were ousted from the army Saturday.

The five were retired for allegedly being sympathetic to the Buddhist cause. Included were Gen. Nguyen Thanh Thi, who was until recently a powerful member of the military junta which has been more or less in control of South Viet Nam since late 1963.

It was a 20-man tribunal of Thieu's fellow-generals who decided his punishment after two days of deliberation. They allowed him to retire honorably with pension, but not until he has served 60 days in confinement.

STIFFER TERMS

Whether this would be in a military prison or under house arrest was not clear.

Another three-star general, Ton Thi, was severely punished. After his 60 days of confinement, he will be dismissed from the army, without pension.

A major general, Huynh Van Cao, was allowed to retire honorably with pay, as was Brig. Nguyen Van Chau.

NORTH COMMAND

All four men had served as 1st Corps commander, which gave them complete military and governmental authority over the five northernmost provinces where Buddhist political forces were most active.

This was relieved March 10 for failing to heed orders from the central government in rapid succession thereafter, Chau, Dinh and Cao assumed the high office. They failed, in the opinion of the Saigon generals, to curb the Buddhist, student and government civilian forces which rose in revolt. Cao, for example, lasted only a few days before being relieved.

A fifth general punished according to Saturday's official announcement, was Brig. Gen. Phan Xuan Nguan. He commanded the Vietnamese 1st Division. Some of its units went over to the rebel side, and Nguan did little to stop them, according to the tribunal's verdict.

DA NANG, HUE

Nguan also will get six months' confinement, will be reduced to colonel — and then retired with pay.

The rioting and demonstrations centered in the northern cities of Da Nang and Hue. In Hue, anti-government mobs burned the U.S. consulate and library, while some of Nguan's troops stood by.

The defiant forces were finally put down by elite units of paratroopers, marines and rangers flown from Saigon at the order of Prime Minister Nguyen Cao Ky.

By some military standards, the generals who were punished have been tried for subversion or treason. Instead, they were accused only of being "soft" in carrying out orders, or "sympathetic" to the Buddhists.

Doctor's Daughter Severely Injured

The eight-year-old daughter of a Victoria doctor was severely injured Saturday when playing on a beach at the northeast end of Salt Spring Island. Catriona Cupples, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. F. Cupples of 2833 Dufferin, suffered a fractured skull when a beached log rolled over on top of her.

Her father bundled her into his car, and received police clearance to rush his daughter to Royal Jubilee Hospital in Victoria.

The little girl was reported in fair condition late Saturday night.

Sandcastles Cross Ocean In Bid To Stop War Toys

International Sandcastle Days, a 20-foot pole carrying a banner that bore the words "No War Toys," was erected in the sand at the beach in Victoria, B.C., on Saturday.

The idea was originated by No War Toys, an organization most active in Los Angeles.

Large sandcastles are being built along the coast of California on International Sandcastle Days — the first Sunday of June, July, August and September — and the scheme has spread as far as Australia and the South Sea Islands.

FIRST ON ISLAND

The Voice of Women hopes to organize similar events in August on many Vancouver Island and mainland beaches.

Its first effort, at Parksville, was sponsored by the Parksville-Qualicum branch.

The sandcastle reached a height of more than 5 1/2 feet in two hours, due mainly to the efforts of children — and some adults — from as far away as Victoria and Terrace.

The builders added some original decorations and the whole thing was topped with a flag.

Go See Caravan

Ottawa Offers 1967 Suggestion

For anyone who is deciding now what his 1967 centennial activities will cover, the Canadian centennial Commission in Ottawa has provided a bit of help.

The commission has released the itinerary of the Confederation Caravan that will tour Vancouver Island from May 24 to June 17.

The caravan will be one of eight giant tractor trailer units, the largest vehicles ever to use North American highways, that will visit 700 cities and villages across Canada in 1967. Of the 700 communities, 89 will be in B.C. and 11 will be in the Vancouver Island area.

This particular caravan will not visit Greater Victoria or Courtenay June 15 to 17.

INLAND DATES

This area's itinerary starts at Salt Spring Island May 24, then moves to Sooke May 25 and Colwood May 26 and 27.

The caravan then visits Shawnigan Lake May 28, Duncan May 29 and 30, Lake Cowichan June 1, Chemainus June 2 and 3, Ladysmith June 4, Parksville June 5, Qualicum June 7, the Alberni June 8 to 11, Campbell River June 13 and 14, and Courtenay June 15 to 17.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Atomic Energy Commission will soon propose a step-up in the U.S. effort to harness the hydrogen bomb reaction to produce electricity — just the Soviet Union get the jump.

The AEC's move is in the form of a progress report and recommendations for future action to be delivered in a few days to the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee.

It comes in the wake of unpublished reports by AEC advisers — including one by its own staff scientists — that:

• The Soviet Union has forged ahead of the United States in financial and manpower output for the quest — Scientists say success in the effort could provide a new source of energy that can last for some 20,000,000,000 years, while present power sources could be exhausted within decades.

• The Soviet Union is threatening to overtake America's lead in scientific gains toward the goal of using the hydrogen of the world's oceans as a cheap, safe and efficient fuel of limitless supply to generate electricity.

• The U.S. effort toward taming the H-bomb fusion reaction — known as "controlled thermonuclear research" — has been impeded by budgets now running at about $22,000,000 yearly.

• This has resulted, the reports contend, in the need for scientists to work with equipment that is becoming outdated, and a severe curtailment of the normal influx of young scientists into the field.

The first of these reports was compiled in January by a panel of non-AEC scientists headed by Dr. Raymond G. Herb of the University of Wisconsin. AEC staff scientists then compiled a report based largely on the findings of the private panel.

Both reports state that:

• Whereas four years ago U.S. participation in the world-wide effort constituted nearly half the total effort in terms of expenditures and manpower, it has now dropped to one-fifth — in contrast to the Soviet 37 per cent. Other countries, including West Germany, France, Japan and Italy contribute the remaining 43 per cent, it was reported.

• Four years ago, American scientific contributions to effective progress in the quest amounted to well over one-half of the world total, but this has dropped to about one-third, and is declining rapidly.

The forthcoming report by the commission itself is expected to reflect the view that a breakthrough is attainable before the end of this century.

The report is also expected to say that in addition to the prospect of harnessing the hydrogen fusion reaction for the generation of electric power, research in this field — involving "plasma," or ionized gases — can have side benefits in such areas as:

• Developing new types of generators that would directly convert the energy of various types of gaseous materials — aside from hydrogen — into electricity.

• Helping scientists distinguish warheads from other objects during re-entry into the atmosphere.

• The possibility of propelling manned and unmanned space vehicles by high-energy exhaust of ion and "plasma" thrusters.

• Helping solve the problem of communications blackouts during space vehicle re-entry.

Surveyor Revives

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Scientists said Saturday there is new hope for Surveyor I, America's eye on the moon.

A Jet Propulsion Laboratory spokesman said the satellite, believed to be dying on the moon, suddenly revived Saturday and there is a possibility of getting more pictures from the moon.

AP Pasadena wire service said.

Nobody in Duncan Expected Old Cars

By COLONIST

Island Reporters

Everything was laid on well in advance in Nanaimo for the arrival of the vintage cars Saturday — but not so in Duncan.

As the cars made their way along a B.C. centennial route to Victoria, where they finally arrived at 5:30 in the afternoon, Mayor Maffeo and Nanaimo centennial committee chairman Frank Ney were waiting in their city — with hundreds of spectators.

The spectators also were present in Duncan, but no civic official was present to extend a greeting.

The ancient cars arrived in Duncan in the early afternoon, going on to Victoria after several hundred people admired their interesting display at Pioneer Park.

"I don't know if Duncan was supposed to be an organized stop," said Sam Keeble, president of the Duncan-Cowichan Chamber of Commerce.

"The city council and the Chamber of Commerce didn't know anything about it," he said, "and the chairman of the local centennial committee, Ernie Hamm, is out of town.

"I think it was lack of communication between the Vintage Car Club and the city of Duncan," said Mr. Keeble.

"Nobody even knew when they were coming to Duncan."

Big Model Built At Dockyard

Some light has been thrown on the history of a model of a full-sized sailing vessel now housed in the B.C. Maritime Museum.

Museum curator Col. J. W. D. Symons was interested in checking out the origin of the large model, with masts better than six feet high, which was donated by the museum by Queen Alexandra Solerum. Solerum (of which had no record of the model's origin).

Since appealing for help Col. Symons now has information that the model was built for the Navy Day parade in 1958 by the craftsmen at HMC Dockyard.

Inspector Tops Class

David W. R. Smith, 734 Rogers, a Saanich municipal inspector, has topped his class in an administration course sponsored by the University of B.C. and the municipal affairs department. He will be presented with an award from the department for leading the class of 14 in the four-year course.

Holidays Shattered By Airlines Strike

By UPI

The spreading impact of the three-day old airlines strike shattered travel and vacation plans for thousands and reached out Saturday to touch the lives of persons who never get close to an airport.

Mail deliveries slowed. Embargoes were placed on air freight. The tourist and convention industry, particularly hotels and restaurants which cater to it, began to feel the pinch created by the walkout of machinists of five major airlines.

The machinists' walkout against Eastern, Northwest, United, Trans World and National airlines began to pinch pockets around the country.

Hotelmen at Miami Beach, Fla., said the strike would cause "partial or complete disaster" to its summer tourist business. The Chicago Convention Bureau said 65,000 conventioners had been expected in the city this weekend.

About 3,500 hotel rooms had been reserved for the visitors, most of whom had been expected to arrive by air.

MAIL DELAYS

Postmaster General Lawrence P. O'Brien took emergency measures but said there will be serious delays in mail deliveries.

Non-struck airlines reported capacity bookings. Feeder airlines, railroads and buses also said they were much busier than usual.

Crash Victim Dies

A two-car crash on Patricia Bay Highway at 2:40 p.m., Saturday claimed the life of an Oak Bay woman.

Dead is Mrs. Sarah Forryan, 84, who was a passenger in a car driven by her husband, Cyril, 84, when it was involved in the crash at Patricia Bay Highway and Sayward Road.

Driver of the second car was Clifford Allan, 23, of 6838 Ves-anes.

The evident objective of the North Vietnamese is to use the populations of those villages as a shield against American bombings.

U.S. policy since the beginning of the air war 17 months ago has been to avoid influcting civilian casualties while hitting at military targets in North Viet Nam.

Sources here said Saturday Robert McNamara was told during a Honolulu military conference that North Vietnamese oil stocks are being dispersed.

The sources familiar with what was discussed at the Honolulu conference said the oil is being placed in above-ground and below-ground storage drums in scattered villages.

There is no estimate available of the percentage of North Viet Nam's oil being so dispersed.

McNamara returned Saturday from his Honolulu conference at Pacific Command Headquarters where he got a briefing from Admiral U.S. Grant Sharp, U.S. military chief in the Pacific.

Speaking to reporters at

Andrew Air Force Base, McNamara said the U.S. forces in Viet Nam in recent weeks have been able to deny the North Vietnamese soldiers and their Viet Cong allies "the opportunity to assemble forces in sufficient size to mount a monsoon offensive."

Sources said he was referring here to "spoiling operations" by fast-moving American troop formations.

Two cable car passengers are lowered by rescue ropes

Three Alps Cable Cars Fall Eighteen Tourists in Hospital

CHAMONIX, France (UPI) — Three cable gondola cars crowded with tourists jolted off a guide cable Saturday and plunged more than 100 feet onto the snow-covered floor of a two-mile-high valley in the shadow of Europe's loftiest mountain.

At least 18 persons — some of them children — were injured. Reports from hospitals in Chamonix, a resort town 9,000 feet below the rugged "White Valley," said 14 of the tourists were injured seriously. Four others were treated for minor injuries.

The accident left another 80 tourists dangling in 40 other small cable cars in the shadow of the majestic 15,781-foot Mont Blanc. The cars were cautiously winched back to the terminal stations after swinging for hours as high as 500 feet above the valley floor.

It was believed part of a support pylon failed and fell into the valley, dragging down with it the cars travelling between the pylon and the terminal station.

Five years ago, a French air force jet fighter on a training mission clipped the cable in the valley, plunging three cars to the ground. Six persons were killed and many others were stranded in other cars.

Last Christmas, 17 skiers were hurled from a cable car in central France when it made an emergency stop. Seven of them were killed and ten others seriously injured.

But there was Bobby.

The idea occurred to everyone at the same time. The people on shore fixed a key and a pair of pliers to Bobby's collar. Someone threw a stick into the sea and Bobby automatically charged after it.

When Bobby reached the stick Mr. Miser began coaxing him onward in German so he wouldn't return to shore.

Shaggy legs churning and muzzle held high, Bobby kept coming through the waves and entangling kelp.

They hauled their rescuer aboard, got the engine going in a moment and made the journey to Sidney.

Villagers Shield Hanoi's Oil targets they aimed at, the oil targets.

Noting that Russia, along with Britain is co-chairman of the Geneva agreements on peace in Indochina but has refused to convene the interested powers, Rusk said:

RUSK SAYS UNNECESSARY

"It's not necessary for this kind of question to arise if they would meet their duties under the agreements. All that kind of talk from the Soviet Union is unnecessary."

Officials at the U.S. Defence Department said last Thursday that there were no ships close to the Haiphong depot when U.S. planes struck. They said three freighters were seen in the outer harbor but their nationality was not determined.

Although the attack that day centered on remnants of the Haiphong oil depot wrecked June 29, the Soviet note referred to the raid as an attack on the port of Haiphong itself.

BULLETS MISS SHIPS

The note said, "Fragments and machine gun fire fell in close proximity to the Soviet merchant ships Kubyshchev, Sovetsk and Ustug."

"Four hours later planes dropped a number of big metal objects around the motorship Komsomol lying at anchor in the Malong Bay," it added.

The objects were not further identified in the Soviet note. Conceivably, they could have been jettisoned fuel tanks from the U.S. aircraft.

U.S. Raids 'Curtail Peace Possibilities'

MOSCOW (UPI) — Moscow Radio said Saturday American "pirate raids" on Hanoi and Haiphong have curtailed the possibilities for a peaceful settlement of the Viet Nam war.

"The only people who dare to question this are those in Washington," the broadcast said.

"Obviously Washington leaders think they can converse with representatives of the other side at the conference table while keeping their guns trained on them."

Oak Bay and Saanich B committees will both hold meetings this week.

Oak Bay's committee will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday to consider:

- Parallel parking on Esplanade.
 - Establishing 15 mile-per-hour speed limit on municipal lanes.
 - Cranmore Road crosswalk.
 - Council's future road reconstruction policy.
 - Street lighting improvements.
 - Esplanade - Cattle Point improvement.
- Saanich B committee (public works) will meet at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday in committee room No. 2 at the municipal hall.

Folk Music Featured At Holiday Bash

By BERT BINNY

Performers from Toronto, Vancouver and Victoria contributed their talents to the Summer Holiday Bash in Centennial Square Saturday night.

But no matter how wide spread, their points of origin their entertainment in dition was largely the same: modern folk music.

OPEN PROGRAM

From Toronto, but now appearing at Jon York's Music Hall, were Lee and Sean Richards who opened the program. Also from the Music Hall were the Gibson Brothers who, with drummer Scotty Miller, provide what is, apparently, said, termed country blues. The trio hails from Vancouver and the brothers are Roger, Jerome and Willy.

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP)

The port of Port Angeles could use twice as many long-shoremen gangs as are now available, says James Norton of Local 27, International Longshoremen's Union. A heavy increase in log exports to Japan has accounted for the demand for crews to work the ships, he said.

Loudspeaker Battler Pauses for Removal

The one-man campaign to stop loudspeaker music on the 700 block Yates ceased Saturday as the lone picketer withdrew with his placard.

"I'm hoping that I have registered sufficient disapproval against the speakers that the people responsible for them will remove them on their own volition," said W. G. Smith, 937 Balmoral.

"If they are not removed then I intend to take further action," he added.

The 61-year-old retired contractor declined to say what further action he planned.

Mr. Smith became angry last week when the piped music was turned on beneath the canopy on the south side of Yates, and began picketing in protest.

"I regard the speakers as a serious invasion of my rights as a citizen," he said.

Mr. Smith explained that he is not against music, but he is defending his right to be able to choose the time and place he would like to hear it.

"The only way I could possibly not hear the music, if I walked under the canopy, would be to wear ear plugs, and this I refuse to do," he said.

Mr. Smith said that since his campaign was launched he has received many telephone calls from people congratulating him on his stand in defence of what he believes to be an inalienable right of a free man - to listen or not listen to music as he chooses.

'WHITTLED AWAY'

"This is only a small thing, but our rights are constantly being whittled away, and if somebody doesn't step out and complain we'll eventually lose them all," he said.

"Once a precedent has been established it is extremely difficult to have the situation reversed."

"I certainly don't look forward to making a spectacle of myself on the street, but I'm not going to sit idly by and watch my rights gradually be gobbled up by commercialism without making an effort to do something about it."

All but one pleaded guilty and most were fined $15 or three days in jail.

'Drunks' Day' Marked By Court

It was "drunks' day" at central magistrate's court Saturday when 16 people appeared charged with being intoxicated in a public place.

credited a great increase in effectiveness to what he called a very substantial expansion to about 280,000 U.S. fighting men there and to "the very dramatic increase in our helicopter force."

With that helicopter force, which he put at some 1,700 machines, McNamara said "we have so increased our mobility, so reduced our reaction time that the VC ambush tactics which previously led to frequent military success are now suffering severe failures."

McNamara described himself as cautiously optimistic, saying: "We're gaining militarily but it's impossible to predict the time at which this will come to a successful conclusion. And I don't want to indicate that it's soon."

Asked about possible war-weariness among the North Vietnamese, McNamara said "we do have some evidence" from prisoners and defectors and from captured documents, which does indicate some war weariness, some erosion of morale.

McNamara said there is no clear evidence yet as to whether the bombing of oil depots has had an effect on the movement of equipment into South Viet Nam.

Major discussion at the Honolulu conference revolved around logistical and support requirements of present and future operations.

Small Electrical Shocks Never Medically Harmful

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: We've been searching for the right source: Carpet expert? Electrician? Doctor?

What causes electric shocks when walking on nylon carpeting? What can be done to prevent them? All members of the family, except one, experience these shocks. We can't turn on a light, touch the wall, which has metal laths under the plaster, open a window (metal frames) or dial the phone without a shock.

This has become such a problem that we are ready to give up the carpeting. Can you help?—MRS. C.T.

It's not strictly a medical question, but what happens is this: Friction between two dry insulated surfaces (in this case your shoes and the carpet) builds up charges of static electricity. At the first opportunity these charges will escape to the ground—and the metal in your house or apartment is connected to the ground. That's when you get the shock and a small spark.

Your Good Health

Medically it is harmless, but it is startling and annoying. What is needed is some way for these static electricity charges to leak off gradually instead of building up. You've seen gasoline trucks with a piece of chain or metal ribbon dragging on the ground. This is to let such charges leak off of the ground instead of building up to make a spark that might ignite the truck's cargo of gas.

INFLAMMABLE

For years now, operating rooms in hospitals have been equipped with "conductive" floors, that is, floors which carry electric charges off to the ground and prevent sparks. (Some anaesthetics are highly inflammable.) Nurses and doctors are instructed to never wear nylon slippers or underwear. Nylon is an insulator, hence with friction can build up static charges. Cotton, however, which absorbs a bit of moisture becomes a conductor instead of an insulator—so charges leak away as fast as they build up. Result: No sparks or shocks.

A carpet manufacturer told me that for several years rug and carpet cleaning establishments have used a spray which prevents nylon and other synthetic fibres from building up static. It takes the shock out of carpets.

UNKNOWN

In checking around, I discovered that this spray is still completely unknown in some carpeting stores, and that some cleaners don't seem to know about it, either. One simple temporary spray I have found effective is a weak solution of a household detergent in water.

Applied as a fine spray to the carpet, this is effective for several days.

You may have noticed that when you walk barefoot, you don't get these shocks. There's enough moisture on the feet to let the static drain off. Footwear which, for any reason, conducts electricity would do the same. In warm, moist weather there is less trouble.

Owners Upset

Story Hurts Gulf Inns

GANGES — A New Westminster newspaper writer who described most Gulf Island resorts as "quaint" visited only two of the 14 Salt Spring Island resorts, owners of the businesses charged last week.

A travel guide column in the newspaper said most resorts on the islands "can best be described as quaint."

TWO EXCEPTIONS
The writer named with reservations two exceptions on Salt Spring and one each on Galiano and Mayne.

One resort owner told a Chamber of Commerce meeting where the matter came up that an Edmonton family had cancelled a three-week reservation on the strength of the column.

He said friends on the coast of the Edmontonians had sent them a copy of the column and the Alberta family sent the copy on to him.

MOST UNFAIR
Another owner called the criticism "most unfair" and said Gulf Islands resort owners have spent thousands of dollars to provide comfortable and up-to-date establishments.

He claimed, and others supported him, that the writer visited only two of the 14 Salt Spring centres.

President of the Salt Spring Chamber is Mrs. Beth Wood, who used to be mayor of New Westminster.

On way to PNE Festival of Forestry in Vancouver are two 80-foot spar trees that almost completely hide their truck. Trees were logged at Meachie Lake by T. W. McKee Logging, donated by Pacific Logging and hauled by Princess of Vancouver late Friday as timber companies' contribution to festival. Eldon Reay of Nanaimo drove truck. (Agnes Flett)

Harewood Land Reclassified

Farmer's Protest Aids Many

NANAIMO—More than 50 taxpayers have had their land reclassified in Harewood, exempting them from the district's sewer tax.

Local farmer Ben Farkas of Bruce Avenue, started the action in the spring when he complained of paying for a service he didn't receive.

He was assessed for sewers but they didn't come anywhere near his house.

Mr. Farkas said he has been paying the assessment for the past seven years, and maintains that, according to the Water Act, he can recover his payments.

He also wants the $850 he had to pay last year to recover his farm for tax sale, which was put up for sale when he didn't pay his sewer assessment.

Mr. Farkas said he has received notice from the government reclassifying Harewood, a suburb of Nanaimo, into three categories.

Class A will pay the full assessment, Class B about half and Class C none at all.

These residents in Class B must live more than 330 feet from the nearest sewer line but not more than 660 feet.

Those over the 660 foot mark are in Class C, like Mr. Farkas.

Totem Rite July 30?

QUALICUM BEACH — The ceremony dedicating the totem pole marking the Route of the Haida may be held on Jamboree Day, July 30.

Officials here expressed that hope late last week. The ceremony was to have been held in June but was postponed when it was learned the carving of the totem had not been completed.

SHAWNIGAN LAKE — The future of a fawn named Bimbi is in doubt.

The fawn was found about three weeks ago in the grass along the Shawnigan-Mill Bay Road.

Eight-year-old Debbie Hughes made the discovery and now Bimbi is the pet of her family.

But mother Mrs. Don Hughes is afraid a hunter will shoot Bimbi or a car will hit him. She has informed what she calls the proper authorities, but so far, nothing has been done.

"Just as long as we don't keep him penned up, we won't be breaking the law," says Mrs. Hughes.

"But every time I see a car drive into the driveway, I get a lump in my throat." For the time being, Bimbi is playing with the Hughes' children like any puppy or kitten.

He is fed from a bottle every three or four hours and has no fear of human beings, dogs or cats or hunters and cars.

Pupil Boom Means Jobs — And Difficult Decisions

By JOY HUNTLEY

CAMPBELL RIVER — The pupil boom in this school district is leading to an unprecedented amount of work, and some difficult decisions for the school board.

Here's the latest rundown: The board this past week decided to call for tenders immediately on additions to three schools and the construction of a new one, even though formal approval has not been received from the provincial government for two of the projects.

Shift Study

Trustees expressed concern over delays in receiving approval from Victoria on vital additions — delays that caused them to study possible ways of avoiding shifts for elementary pupils in September.

Eight new classrooms were turned over to the board only last April, and the trustees discovered eleven more already are needed — and at once.

Chairman Bruce Saunders said the pupil increase in the district was nine per cent last year and 12 per cent this year.

"Who knows how high next year's will be?" he wondered.

Major Need

Mr. Saunders pointed out that an average 10 per cent increase alone will mean at least 30 more rooms will be needed in the next three years.

The trustees took some action on another big problem — the vocational training wing and gymnasium activity area for the new senior high school. The academic wing was completed last Christmas but vocational and gym areas still must be held in the junior high.

This has forced steady bus service between the two schools.

No Jewelry

The board approved modified working drawings drawn up by architect Morris Kenton for the vocational wing.

Last year's drawings were rejected by the provincial government as too expensive, but Mr. Kenton said the new ones "have only the bare necessities... no jewelry, no chandeliers, not even windows.

The trustees asked that the drawings be taken personally to Victoria for approval, and that vocational tenders be called as soon as this is granted by the education department.

Mr. Kenton also was instructed to go ahead with working drawings for the gym under his Plan B at an estimated cost of $334,390.

The trustees felt Plan A, at an estimated $290,360, and Plan C, at $299,125 and expandable, would cost more than B when enlarged. The education department has expressed the opinion that Plan A is entirely inadequate.

Purchase of four portable classrooms for vocational students was approved as the board accepted a bid by Greenall Bros. Ltd. for $37,335. Other tenders were $46,576 by Tecton Structures and $60,512 by Alco Industries.

And that wasn't all by a long shot — the trustees announced the purchase of a site for a new school at Kelsey Bay.

The site, bought from MacMillan-Bloedel, is in the new Kelsey Bay subdivision where 230 homes are planned to house a population of 1,000.

The price includes services for the two-room elementary school, which is to be completed by September of 1967, as well as clearing and draining of the site by this coming September.

The board had planned to transport junior high students the 50-odd miles to Campbell River from the area daily, but residents objected. So the board has given the pupils the option of making the daily trip or remaining in classes in the Sayward Valley up in Grade 10.

Two Rooms

Senior students must travel daily or board in Campbell River.

The board also called for plans for a two-room school at Ocean Grove, as a survey has shown enough pupils live in the area. Calberg Jackson will be the architects.

And secretary-treasurer Phil Sampson said Western Mines Ltd. will need a school by Christmas in the Butte Lake area. He was to view the proposed site with manager Charles Campbell last week.

Nanaimo Highland Games

Mainland Athletes Beat Island Again

By PETER TAYLOR

NANAIMO—The Mainland once again won the Pete Maffeo challenge trophy for competition between mainland and Island athletes at the ninth annual highland games in Caledonia Park Saturday.

Maffeo

Point scores for this competition were 207 for the mainland and 179 for the Island.

The trophy was presented by Bob Lambie of Nanaimo to Rick Meade, the assistant coach of Vancouver Olympics, the leading mainland club in the results.

John Cliff of Victoria was judged the best athlete of the meet. He won the mile in four minutes, 25.2 seconds. Record for that event was 4:10.5.

MANY DIGNITARIES

Frank Ney, chairman of the city's centennial committee, performed the opening ceremonies and chairman of the day was Haig Burns.

Dignitaries taking part in the opening were Mayor Maffeo, local MLA Dave Stupich, and John McMillin, president of the Upper Island Highland Games Association.

Starter for the athletic events was Len Robertson, while the judges for the dancing events were Molly MacGregor of Toronto and Mrs. Jocelyn Pipes of Victoria.

MAIN CHAMPIONS

More than 200 competitors took part in the dancing and piping events. The main winners follow, while winners of individual events are listed on Page 39.

The Ladyship trophy for aggregate dance winner under seven years went to Gordon Lyle, while other dancing trophy winners were Kenneth Black, the Campbell River trophy for aggregate winner under nine; Cheryl Rafter, Cumberland trophy, aggregate winner under eleven.

OTHER AWARDS

Special awards went to Gail Bamford, Nootka memorial trophy for the Island resident in amateur competition receiving the highest number of points; and Donna Allen, the Ron Holmes memorial trophy for highest points for any one highland dance in an open class.

Bonnie Elgodd won the Nanaimo Caledonia Society trophy for a Nanaimo district resident in amateur competition receiving the highest number of points, and David Walsing and Ken Black took the Jeffrey Disturbance trophy for best amateur boy dancers.

Beach Slowpokes Prodded by Police

QUALICUM BEACH—RCMP in this area are asking slow drivers to be courteous on the road, and pull onto the shoulder and let the traffic behind pass.

While it is not an offence to drive slowly, it is an offence to impede traffic, an RCMP spokesman stated.

The RCMP official said quite a number of slow drivers were stopped and given warnings over the holiday weekend. In future such drivers may be charged.

Liquor Outlet Dim

Vacant Store Still Standing

Dobson

DUNCAN—Despite city council and business unhappiness, there is no indication anything will be done immediately to demolish a vacant store that was to come down last November.

Razing of the supermarket is being held up because tight money has delayed expansion plans of the company involved — Super-Valu.

And this means the new facilities of the Liquor Control Board are being hidden by the store.

CRITICS ANSWERED

Mayor Dobson, who expressed city council's dissatisfaction, also answered critics who have attacked council's granting of a building permit for the new liquor centre.

He said council granted a permit for the new shopping complex at the same time and was assured work would start soon afterward.

Summer School Of Arts Deep in Agenda

COURTENAY — The Vancouver Island Summer School of the Arts is deep into its program for 1966 after the official opening last Tuesday.

The students are being taught by a teaching faculty of seven.

Dance is being taught by Mrs. Jacqueline Sears, drama by Stuart Baker, music by Gerald Tyler, pottery by George Cummings, creative writing by Raymond Hull and rock-bounding by Al Douba.

The Vancouver youth orchestra performed at the opening ceremony.

COUNCIL WELCOME

Summer school director Mrs. Beryl Regier welcomed the audience on behalf of the Courtenay community arts council.

Mayor Hobson spoke for the city, expressing the hope the summer school will be held again in future years, and school board chairman Brian Walker expressed similar sentiments.

Main guest speaker was Ralph Flitton, past president of the Vancouver community arts council.

Coquitlam Slaying

Several Sought
On Son's Story

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police to the killer's identity — were picked up Saturday for questioning in connection with the slaying of Mrs. Anna Whitby, 28-year-old housewife.

Police said they have a vague description of the killer from the woman's six-year-old son, Murray, but said it is hard to accept it as being completely reliable.

DON'T KNOW

Just how much he can remember from the boy, we really don't know," an RCMP spokesman said.

The male body of the suburban Port Moody housewife was discovered Friday in a water-filled ditch in bushland in Coquitlam. She had been strangled with her own slacks sometime Thursday.

Her son was found wandering alone on a nearby road Friday morning.

KNIFE USED?

Although Mrs. Whitby's body bore no signs that any weapon was used, the police spokesman said Murray suggested that his mother had been strangled with a knife before she was strangled.

Police were using a power shovel Saturday to dig mud from the ditch in which Mrs. Whitby's body was found. They hope they will find some clue

Students Lauded

'Wonderful Effort'

COURTENAY — Vancouver Island psychiatrist Dr. S. E. Jensen has high praise for students of the Comox District senior high school.

He says they have raised enough money, $175, to sponsor a child at his Shawinigan Lake August camp for children with emotional problems.

"This is a wonderful effort," Dr. Jensen said of the students. As an occasional consultant in the Comox Valley, Dr. Jensen said, he hopes at least three children can go to camp from this area if sponsors can be found. He said it was hoped service and other clubs would be able to come up with the money.

Children for the camp will be selected from 200 on consultation lists of Island health units. Campers will be aged six to 13, boys or girls.

Dr. Jensen said the camp could handle more than three from this district if money is provided. Chairman of the camp's directorate is Dr. M. G. Zorkin of Nanaimo.

U.S. Urged to Beat Russia
To Peaceful H-Power Use

By FRANK CAREY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Atomic Energy Commission will soon propose a step-up in the U.S. effort to harness the hydrogen bomb reaction to produce electricity — lest the Soviet Union get the jump.

The AEC's move is in the form of a progress report and recommendations for future action to be delivered in a few days to the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee.

It comes in the wake of unpublished reports by AEC advisers — including one by its own staff scientists — that:

● The Soviet Union has forged ahead of the United States in the effort to harness the hydrogen bomb reaction to produce electricity. Scientists say success in the effort could provide a new source of energy that can last for some 20,000,000,000 years, while present power sources could be exhausted within decades.

● The Soviet Union is threatening to overtake America's lead in scientific gains toward the goal of using the hydrogen of the world's oceans as a cheap, safe and efficient fuel of limitless supply to generate electricity.

● The U.S. effort toward taming the H-bomb fusion reaction — known as "controlled thermonuclear research" — has been impeded by budgetary problems. The U.S. effort has been running at about $22,000,000 yearly.

This has resulted, the reports contend, in the need for scientists to work with equipment that is becoming outdated, and a severe curtailment of the normal influx of young scientists into the field.

The first of these reports was compiled in January by a panel of non-AEC scientists headed by Dr. Raymond G. Herb of the University of Wisconsin. AEC staff scientists then compiled a report based largely on the findings of the private panel.

Both reports state that:

● Whereas four years ago U.S. participation in the worldwide effort constituted nearly half the total effort in terms of expenditures and manpower, it has now dropped to one-fifth — in contrast to the Soviet 37 per cent. Other countries, including West Germany, The United Kingdom, France, Japan and Italy contribute the remaining 43 per cent, it was reported.

● Four years ago, American scientific contributions to effective progress in the quest amounted to well over one-half of the world total, but this has dropped to about one-third, and is declining rapidly.

The forthcoming report by the commission itself is expected to reflect the view that a breakthrough is attainable before the end of this century.

The report is also expected to say that in addition to the prospect of harnessing the hydrogen fusion reaction for the generation of electric power, research in this field — involving "plasmas," or ionized gases — can have side benefits in such areas as:

● Developing new types of generators that would directly

Nanaimo Laid On Everything

Nobody in Duncan Expected Old Cars

By COLONIST
Island Reporters

Everything was laid on well in advance in Nanaimo for the arrival of the vintage cars Saturday — but not so in Duncan.

As the cars made their way along a B.C. centennial event route to Victoria, where they finally arrived at 5:30 in the afternoon, Mayor Moffat and Nanaimo centennial committee chairman Frank Ney were waiting in their city — with hundreds of spectators.

The spectators also were present in Duncan, but no civic official was present to extend a greeting.

The ancient cars arrived in Duncan in the early afternoon, going on to Victoria after several hundred people admired their interesting display at Pioneer Park.

"I don't know if Duncan was supposed to be an organized stop," said Sam Keeble, president of the Duncan-Cowichan Chamber of Commerce.

The city council and the Chamber of Commerce didn't know anything about it," he said, "and the chairman of the local centennial committee, Ernie Hamm, is out of town."

"I think it was lack of communication between the Vintage Car Club and the city of Duncan," said Mr. Keeble.

"Nobody even knew when they were coming to Duncan."

In Nanaimo, the cavalcade of 29 old cars chugged into town just after 9 a.m., on the last lap of their eight-day tour of the province.

Houston Mill
Going Ahead

HOUSTON, B.C. (CP) — J. Martin Ritchie, managing director of England's Bowater Paper Co., has confirmed a report that the mill will have a daily production of 750 to 1,000 tons, he said following a tour of this area of northwestern British Columbia.

One of the oldest cars was a 1913 Stanley Steamer. It was towed on a trailer because it holds up the parade, but, when stops are made, the Stanley, driven by George Hebbert of Duncan, tours the town.

The tour left New Westminster July 2 for a trip around the Okanagan and down the Fraser Valley.

Three of the oldest cars which made the lengthy tour were a 1913 Russell driven by Vernon Wellburn of Vancouver, a 1911

Mitchell by John Mortard of Duncan and a 1921 Model T Ford by Gerald Wellburn of Duncan.

Just making the Island part of the journey from Nanaimo to Victoria is a 1911 Russell-Knight driven by Clifford Scroggie of Vancouver — a scumious

At the start 31 cars took the road but a baby Austin drove a rod and a 1911 Napier was plagued with bad luck despite valiant efforts by its owner.

Verne Beaumont, assistant coordinator of the parade, said the Napier's engine was completely disassembled twice.

A celebrity was a 1924 Rolls Royce driven by A. J. Thompson of Burnaby. This car was the 1 in the movie The Colonel And I.

Nanaimo Blood Clinic Falls Short of Goal

NANAIMO — In a three-day blood donor clinic here, 702 pints were collected, less than half-way toward the target of 1,500 pints.

Winner of the Junior Chamber of Commerce trophy for best percentage turnout by any one organization was the army camp with 71 per cent of personnel donating, followed by the RCMP with 55 per cent.

The B.C. Vocational school in Nanaimo took the Nanaimo Realty trophy for the greatest number from any organization with 92 donations.

Fred Cooper, chairman of the local blood donor clinic, said he was a little disappointed at the turnout.

This year the clinic was in operation for the first time for three evenings as well as two afternoons.

Last year's July clinic yielded more than 800 pints.

The next blood drive will be staged in Nanaimo in January of next year.

He was flown to Vancouver Friday evening.

Improvements Plan
Urged for Cortez

CAMPBELL RIVER — The proposed formation of an improvement district on Cortez Island for electric light and power facilities has been announced by Municipal Affairs Minister Campbell.

He said objections to the proposal must be in his hands before Aug. 15.

B.C. Hydro authorities have estimated that, if the district is not formed, installation charges for each householder on the island will be $393.

However, after three years, others could connect for a minimum hookup fee.

If the district is formed, ratepayers must elect three trustees and then vote on a bylaw authorizing the improvement district to borrow the necessary capital.

They took it to a supermarket. There, the glass of a rear window was broken and one of the steel bars over the window was bent. Apparently, someone then slipped through the window and unlocked the rear door that leads into a storage room.

EFFORT FAILS

The welding unit was wheeled in, in what seemed to be a bid to open the supermarket safe.

But this effort failed.

The thieves were only able to get silver from the tills of the supermarket, plus clothing from a nearby clothing store.

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

At 1034 St. Patrick Street is a little jewel-box of a house, whose chatelaine, Constance Wells Marlow, has since earliest childhood lived, often excitedly, in many lands.

Over the years she has picked up enchanting and colorful souvenirs. Chinese porcelain; Egyptian wall hangings from Cairo; beautiful Persian bowls centuries old; treasures from Mexico; and unique teakwood stands, hand-carved, legs and all, from one solid section of tree trunk. It's a miniature museum.

Her background is dramatic — and she entered it in an equally dramatic manner by almost getting born on the old-fashioned sailing ship that was taking her family to New Zealand. In fact the vessel had to make an unscheduled stop at Dunedin to accommodate the new arrival.

Her father, Fleetwood Wells, must have been typical of a certain class of Englishman. Born on a vast estate in Essex, son of a wealthy man and one of eight brothers, he came into a large sum of money at his majority and took himself off to Australia.

Gay, clever and popular, he nevertheless demonstrated a remarkable ability for losing money as rapidly as he acquired it. A family passion was hunting, and horses. He got in with a racing-and-drinking set "down under," lost every penny of his inheritance, and returned home in considerable disgrace.

But then at a garden party he met a beautiful and well-bred girl with whom he fell instantly in love. In fact it was mutual — and Fleetwood's father was so pleased, (thinking that the young lady would be a steady influence), that all was forgiven. More money was forthcoming, and Fleetwood, with his bride, set up as a gentleman farmer.

Some two years passed by. So did Fleetwood's luck at the race track, and consequently all his capital. On the credit side, two small daughters, Constance's older sisters, had arrived.

There was a family conference. It was decided that the young people should go out to New Zealand and make a fresh start. They went in style, a nurse in attendance. Eliza, who was later to become a tower of strength, and Eliza's husband. It was on this voyage that Constance was born.

At Wellington, Fleetwood Wells heard of a good opening at Hawks Bay, involving the handling of a brickyard that needed proper management. The household of seven departed by bullock-cart, in the absence of any other form of transportation, for a little town named Danesbark — the population was entirely Danish — and here the new manager, certainly capable, had the business on its feet in no time. So shortly the Wells's had a fine new home, with extra servants, big nurseries for the children, and so on.

When the eldest girl reached school age, Mrs. Wells hired a housekeeper to care for her family, and took the child to England. But Fleetwood seems to have found life quite intolerable without his wife. Abruptly one day he called the other little girls to him and asked if they wouldn't like to go to England and be with their mother. They would indeed. So their somewhat irresponsible parent threw up his position, put his mansion on the market, and, in spite of furious opposition from the loyal Eliza, who frequently stood out against her employer's less wise decisions, prepared to return to the old country.

There was a wild exchange of telegrams. "Don't do it — don't come," pleaded Mrs. Wells. "House sold, arriving such and such a date," from New Zealand.

Once embarked, the two girls saw nothing whatever of their father for the remainder of the voyage to England. He had on his person the money from the sale of his property, which was less than it should have been because of his headlong haste, and though there were no horse races aboard, there were card sharps. The inevitable happened. If it hadn't been that the faithful Eliza had insisted on bringing the family silver and pictures, they would have arrived with nothing.

Said Mrs. Wells to her girls: "Well, children, we haven't a penny!"

Again there was a conference. This time Canada was suggested for the wayward son and his family, so to Canada they came. The boat voyage was hideous. There were various disasters, two of which stood out in the children's memories as causing paramount discomfort — the stewardesses had defected, and the cook committed suicide!

Once on the west coast, Fleetwood, who had become interested in mining, heard of the boom then existing in the vicinity of Kamloops, so he settled his family there.

"We had a terrible house," remembers Mrs. Marlow, "and we didn't possess a thing to put in it!"

But Mrs. Wells was equal to this. She collected the wooden boxes which took the place then of today's cardboard cartons, and she made them into stools, tables and book-shelves. These she stained, and furnished her house with bits and pieces. A bitter loss, however, was the silver, packed with such forethought by Eliza. A railway haggard, later discovered to have been pilfering for years, had, during the run out west, cut into the bottom of the tin chest and pinched the lot!

Once again Fleetwood Wells proved his managerial ability, and his fortunes improved. He was in charge of several mines, and in due course a move was made to Tranquille, to a large home on the lake. The girls were sent to school at Crofton House, in Vancouver and when they came of age were given coming-out parties in that city. By and by another move to the north of Kamloops, found them in an old log house on the Thompson River, and here again life became a trifle primitive. They travelled by horse and buggy. They milked their own cows. There was no water laid on, so they must take their laundry down to the river.

"And no simple nylon slips in those days," pointed out Constance. "Instead, frilled petticoats, dozens of them, all draped over the bushes to dry in the sun!"

It was during this period that young Archibald James Marlow, Englishman, was transferred from his bank in Ontario to Kamloops. He and Constance Wells met, and again it was love at first sight.

"He was one of those rather ugly but completely charming men," she said, and in later years found that it amused and delighted her to watch the speed with which stewardesses, waitresses, and old ladies in trains fell for her husband's humor and easy good manners!

When he was appointed to Princeton, to open a branch bank there, the two were married, and travelled to their new home by stage. The "chavaree" given them by their neighbors, and the bride, was something she would never forget!

It was during their sojourn here that, in charge of a kindly old prospector, she rode horseback to Vancouver on a visit, and then became the first woman to travel the Hope-Princeton trail.

The next move was to Salmon Arm, and two daughters were born here. The First World War was in progress, but a dubious heart kept the young banker out of the services. Then came a transfer to Duncan, where they arrived in the midst of 1916's famous snowfall. Because of the war, there was no house waiting for them this time. They were lucky, however, and soon had a charming home made available to them, on Quamichan Lake, although this possessed, for Constance, a special bugbear. She had to run the power plant for the property, and it scared her to death.

"I said a prayer every time I opened it," she said, "and a good thing I did. It blew up after we left!"

Several years went by, and then Marlow was sent to New Westminster and promoted to the zone management of 25 branches of his bank. This meant considerable travelling. Constance went along on one trip, to Dawson, and they had a lovely time. They were fascinated by the public steamers, the games of tennis at midnight, and the fact that the muskeg on which the town was built quivered incessantly. There were 80 saloons at one time or another, an egg cost $1, and so did a bath! It added to the fun that everyone took them for honeymooners.

Eventually an appointment turned up which was considered a special plum — the bank at Trinidad. By now the family consisted of three girls and a boy, and there was much excitement. This time a house was waiting for them, complete from servants to finger bowls, and on the voyage there a train porter, native to the island, told them so much about their future home that they could hardly stand the suspense until they got there.

Their actual arrival was a trifle complicated. On the ship one of the girls, Diana, came down with mumps, and the boy, Geoffrey, with something else vague and unnameable which a German doctor on board, who spoke no English, seemed unable to diagnose. Then there was some misunderstanding, and nobody met the newcomers at the dock. So, anxious to avoid any kind of quarantine, they rather wickedly smothered the two sick youngsters in concealing wraps, and hastily piled into two horse-drawn taxis and headed for a hotel. Here they were lucky enough to obtain a doctor who was willing to do a bit of conniving with them. He suggested that if they kept the children in bed, and lay low, all would shortly be well!

Later in the same day a magnificent car, chauffeur-driven and with a delightful small terrier sitting alongside, arrived at the hotel entrance. It was theirs. However, they were unable to move into their new quarters until the current incumbents could get passage home. Which was just as well, considering the mumps, etc.

Then began a very pleasant life indeed. It was a lovely house, in a lovely spot. A staff of servants was efficiently managed by one Ekane, a sort of feminine butler and major domo. There was much entertaining and being entertained. Constance Marlow particularly enjoyed the lovely Trinidad markets. There was a bell, she remembers, which had an odd function. One of the nice things about living on, or visiting, Vancouver Island is that you are never very far from the beach, and I can think of nothing more enjoyable than a few hours spent on any of the variety of beaches to be found here.

Well, if we are going to dig some clams, let's get going. First let's get the necessary equipment together, a bucket, an ordinary four-tine garden fork or a round-nosed shovel and a pair of knee-length rubber boots. That's all, throw them in the car and let's go.

Hold it, just a minute! Did anyone look at the paper to find out what time the tide is low?

No use dashing off to dig clams if the tide is too high. You'll find a tide table, for local tides, in the lower left corner of page two in The Daily Colonist, or if you prefer you can purchase a tide table from any newsstand which covers the tides for the full year.

It's also a good idea to look up the tides well ahead of time because if you leave it until the day you are going you may find that the low tide if there is one, was earlier than you expected and it will be too late for you to dig clams that day.

You will find by studying the tide table that tides low enough to dig clams only occur for four or five days every two weeks. However, through the summer months the low tides will be in daylight hours which makes for much easier digging than in the winter when a gas lantern or battery flood light is necessary to see what you are doing.

Well, now we've looked up that tide table what is a good tide for digging clams? The lower the better! A Zero tide is excellent. You don't get too many of those however, but a 0.5 or Zero point anything is good, a one-foot tide, or a one point anything is OK. (1.9), but anything over two feet is not too good. Oh, yes, you'll get a few clams up to 2.5 but it's not good.

Here is another valuable tip. When you have determined what time the tide is low, don't wait until the tide is fully out, but get down to the beach about an hour ahead of time. This will afford you a much longer time to get your clams because you can follow the tide down to its lowest point and back up again when it begins to rise. On a good tide this should give you from two to 2½ hours.

Now, on what kind of beach are you most likely to find clams? The best beaches are those made up of sand, gravel and clay or mud. So, when, if ever, will you find clams on a beach made up of nothing but pebbles, pure sand or rocks, except in small inlets between large rocks where sand, gravel and broken clam shell has been washed up by the tide. In such places you will often find quite good colonies of little neck and butter clams.

How do we know where to start digging for clams when we get to the beach? Look around fairly close to the water's edge until you find a lot of little holes that look as if someone has jabbed the beach full of holes with a small stick, and watch for little squirts of water to pop up from the holes. When you have found a place like this you have found what you are looking for, clam graveyards.

Dig out a few shovels full and examine the contents closely for clams. If there are none try another spot a few feet away and perhaps a little deeper. There are clams there or the holes and squirts would not be there. In odd cases a crayfish or sea worm will leave holes but they do not squirt, so if you see squirts you know there are clams.

O.K., we've found a good spot and are getting some clams. How do we determine what kind of clams they are and what we may take, and what we may not take? Oh, yes, there are regulations that must be observed when digging clams, but the only one that is rigidly enforced, for the average person who is taking a few clams for his own use, or shall we say, a non-commercial digger, is the regulation pertaining to size.

Let's say that the clams are only three to six inches under the surface and they measure anywhere from the size of your thumb nail to 2½ inches across the long way of shell, with small ridged lines running vertically from the heel or hinge of the shell to the outside edge. These are little necks, erroneously called butter clams by most amateurs, the most common in the southern area of Vancouver Island and the most desirable for family use. The regulation that you must observe with this clam that it must measure at least 1½ inches across the long way of the shell and if you are caught taking little necks any smaller you could be charged under the Fisheries Act and fined rather heavily.

The razor clam, not as plentiful on the southern end of the island, but very plentiful along the west coast, is a flat, elongated clam, somewhat similar in shape to the old-fashioned straight razor from which its name is derived. You will find this clam at about the same depth as the little neck, and the same regulation as to size applies to this clam also.

Now, if you are digging down about 10 or 12 inches and sometimes deeper and coming up with a larger clam, you are into a bed of Washington butter clams. You will find these ranging in size from about 1½ inches up to about 4½ inches. The small stripes or lines, on this clam, run opposite to those of the little neck. These lines run horizontally across the long way of the shell. The regulation as to size of the butter clam is that it must measure at least 2½ inches across the long way of the shell to be legal.

Well, now the tide is coming back up and forcing you back from your digging spot. Well, we were getting a little tired anyway and our bucket is full of clams, so let's go home. But wait, what are we going to do with our clams? For heaven's sake don't listen to the average Joe on the beach! He will probably tell you to cover them with salt water from the ocean and when you get home to throw in a handful of oatmeal for the clams to feed on so that they will eliminate the sand and grit if you let them sit, over night, in this concoction. Don't you believe it! This is the surest and quickest way I know of killing and spoiling your clams. Just wash them off as clean as you can before you leave the beach and leave them dry in your bucket or gunny sack or whatever you are going to carry them in.

If you are going to use them as soon as you get home you probably will find them a little gritty because they have not had time to eliminate the grit, so it is definitely better to let them sit overnight. Just keep them dry and in a cool place, and they will eliminate the grit and stay alive and keep nicely for several days if desired.

While we're on the subject of erroneous stories about seafoods let's hold a funeral for this one and put it to rest for keeps; the "old wives' tale" about seafoods not being good during the months without an "R." I guess everybody's heard it, at some time or other, but nothing could be phonier. Certainly seafoods spoil very easily and quickly, in hot weather, if it is not properly looked after, but in these days of refrigeration and freezers you can forget that old story. It probably started back in the days long before people even knew what an ice box was.

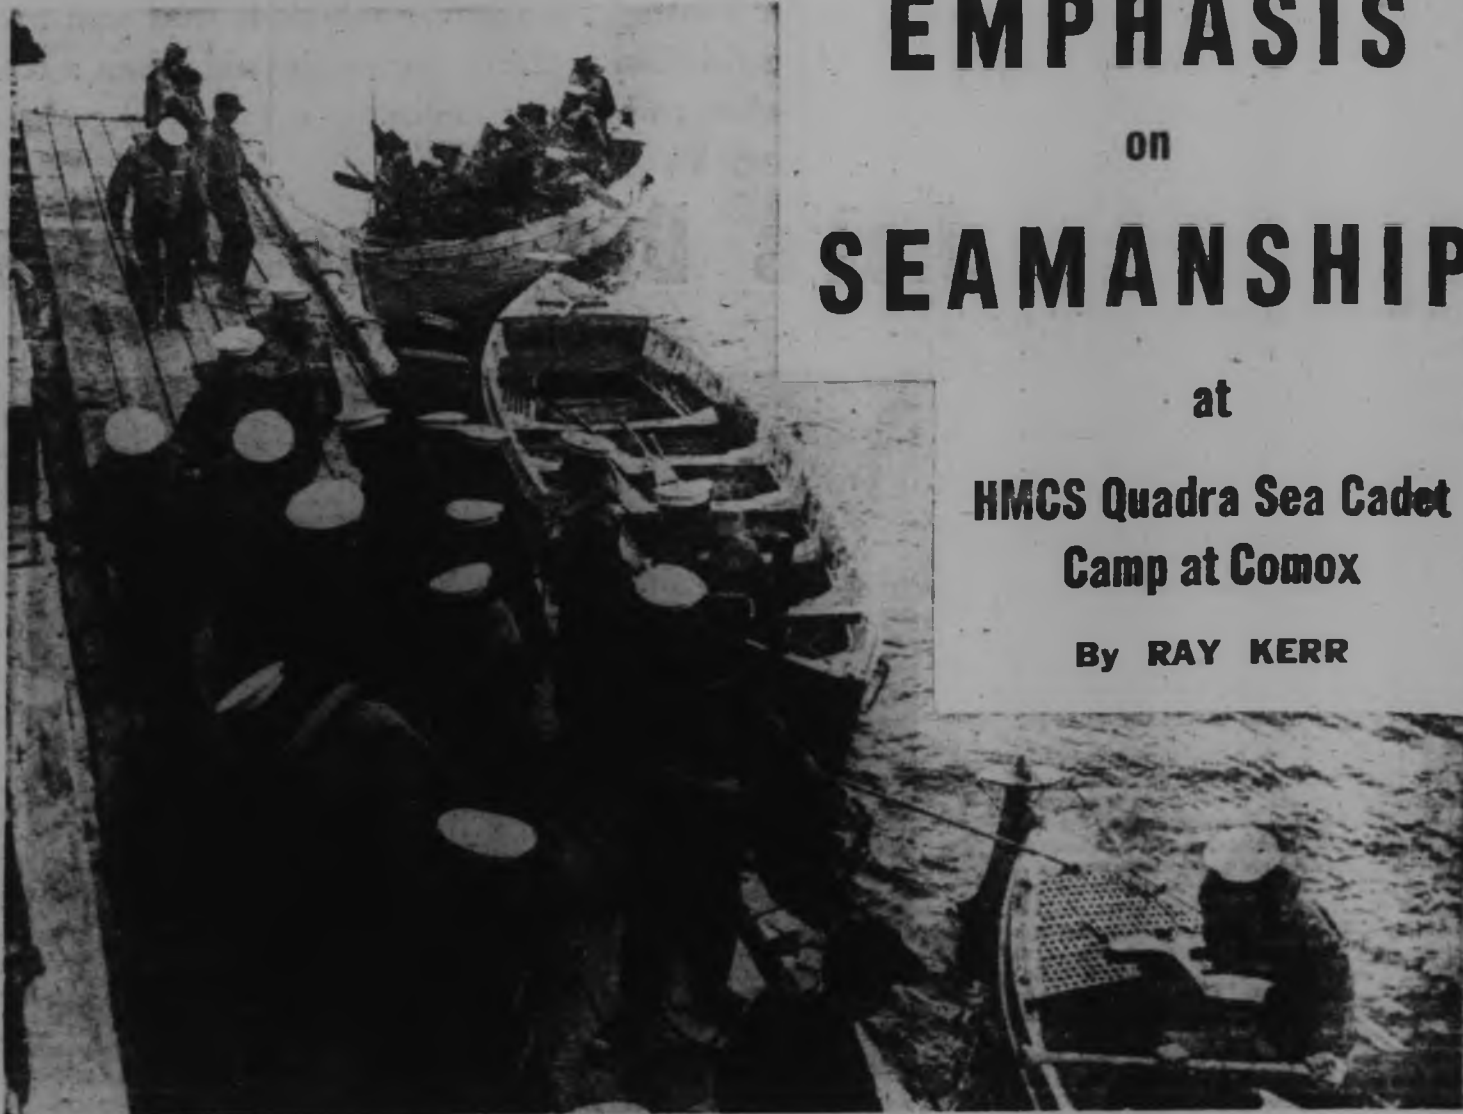

Now that our clams are home and have stood over night or a couple of nights, and are properly degrittled, how to go about cooking them?

This is a question I had to ask about 25 years ago, when I first became interested in clams. I thought the best place to find out would be a seafood restaurant, so I saw the chef, who turned out to be a Chinese, and he told me to: "Boil 'em, boil 'em, boil 'em." In other words he told me to boil them for hours.

Over years of experience I found this to be positively wrong. Don't boil them at all. Rinse them off with cold water. Use a large saucepan with a fairly tight-fitting lid. Put a cup of cold water in the pan, put your clams in and put the lid on and place it over the hot flame or element, whichever you use, bring it to the boil quickly, then turn the heat to low and allow the clams to steam this way for 10 minutes or until the shells

EMPHASIS on SEAMANSHIP at

HMCS Quadra Sea Cadet Camp at Comox

By RAY KERR

Sea Cadets in training with the Royal Canadian Navy at HMCS Quadra near Comox are learning the hard way that navy life isn't all smart uniforms and pretty girls. As a matter of fact, the path to learning gets painfully hard at times.

One weekend, for example, a crew of young Sea Cadets from all over Western Canada set out on what was to be a routine cruise, on board naval vessel YFP-306 and under the command of Lt. Cmdr. Stewart Aisgard, Quadra officer.

The weekend cruise was as uneventful as it was routine, since it takes place practically every weekend during the summer cadet camp.

But when the 40-ton vessel left Westview for a 20-mile crossing to Quadra, the seas began to stir.

A refreshing wind came up at sunset and, with the lights of the station in view the breeze turned into a raging gale.

Lt.-Cmdr. Aisgard, a reserve officer of nearly 12 years, decided to heave-to until the winds abated. However, increasing force winds and high seas battered the 40-ton vessel so severely that the commanding officer's only alternative was to get into shelter.

Back went YFP and its cadet crew, with the commanding officer setting the course for Gillies Bay on the south end of Texada Island, about 15 miles east of HMCS Quadra. Aisgard put the ship's nose again to the wind, planning to sit out the storm until it abated.

However, shallow water, high waves and strong winds in the bay again forced him to move his ship. This time he struck out in a northerly direction, hoping to find shelter at Blubber Bay, on Texada's northern tip. This, too, was unsuccessful and it was past midnight before the battered crew and ship made their way back to Westview.

Regular navy men, comprising a few of the crew on the small yard craft, said they had never experienced such weather in a small ship. "It would be hell on a destroyer," one sailor said.

One youth, a cadet from Alberta, was taken off the boat in Powell River and rushed to hospital where he was treated for double hernia. Nearly every other cadet on board was sea sick during the eight-hour baptism at sea.

Aisgard, commenting on the ordeal later, said the cadets "really showed true navy spirit during the hectic hours of the storm. They'll all make better sailors after that night."

Calmer seas the next morning enabled the ship to make its way back to the Quadra home base where the cadets disembarked, saltier and perhaps more respectful of the Big Water.

Of course, this episode was not an everyday occurrence, and it likely won't happen again for years. But it's there as a reminder that Sea Cadets going to Quadra each summer since 1952 aren't likely to encounter two weeks of fun and games, although of fun and games there are plenty as well.

But there are also ship inspections, once every two weeks, with key figures being Quadra's CO, Lt.-Cmdr. John Hobbs of Vancouver and a high-ranking inspecting officer from Esquimalt.

Take a typical inspection carried out by Capt. R. H. Chicken, deputy chief of staff, technical services, of staff of Maritime Commander (Pacific), HMC Dockyard.

The inspecting officer arrives quite early in the morning, and is piped aboard HMCS Quadra, with selected members of staff and a few especially-chosen top cadets making the ceremony seem quite real.

Even more real is the cadets' performance on Quadra's obstacle course, which is enough to make us typewriter types scurry for cover.

The performance on the obstacle course comes after the inspecting officer has inspected the guard and the divisions, all impeccably bedecked in navy's finest attire.

For the obstacle course, the cadets — ranging in ages from 14 to 18 — are less formally clothed. And they have to be, in order to perform the feats they do.

The youngsters climbed poles with agility that would make even Tarzan turn green with envy. They struggled up nets, something that will come in quite handy if they choose the navy as their profession.

Next they crawled under wires and, as should be expected, a few got snagged and had to be extricated by their colleagues. Another obstacle was a high wall, which had to be climbed, with cadets jumping off it, amidst smoke from timely smoke bombs. There was plenty of laughing on that one.

An interesting obstacle was a set of rubber tires, with cadets wriggling through them as if they were caterpillars. But the majority needed help from their comrades.

Generally speaking, the obstacle course is an exhausting experience, but the cadets put so much into it that officers and visiting press had enough difficulty getting through.

On a recent occasion, cadets' performance was watched by USN Commander T. C. Harshman from Tacoma, Wash. He had nothing but praise for the youngsters' performance and the endurance they showed. He was interested in another sense, since a number of U.S. cadets from Pacific Northwest were at Quadra at the same time.

Cmdr. Harshman admitted the U.S. Sea Cadet movement at the moment was not as extensive as the U.S. Sea Scout program.

"But mark my word," he said, "We're getting there. I think you'll see a big improvement in our Sea Cadet program in the next few years. And I think the Quadra camp will be partly responsible for this."

Cmdr. Harshman pointed out that U.S. cadets at Quadra make friends with Canadian boys and learn the same things from the same instructors. They must find it as pleasant as it has been for me.

You'd think that after such a strenuous exercise as the obstacle course the cadets would be given the rest of the day off.

Not on your life. After a brief pause for lunch, the inspection resumed with swimming races, a sailing regatta and a pulling (rowing) race.

In every one of these events, the youngsters put in their best efforts. Where they got the strength is a matter of conjecture, but the fact that they did speak well for the popular cadet camp and its officers.

But what, in essence, is the cadet course at Quadra, which generally encompasses 1,000 Sea Cadets from all over Western Canada each summer?

The way Quadra officers explained it to me, the camp is a "practical leadership course." The cadets are there to develop their own leadership potential, to instruct occasional classes; and to take training in navigation and advanced seamanship.

For example, cadets are given an opportunity to participate in the 35-member Quadra band. Members of the band come from every province in Western Canada and the band has performed all over Vancouver Island, usually with astounding success.

Quadra cadets come from the Western provinces only. Every two weeks the base gets about 25 new boys, and the interesting fact is that last year not a single cadet went home due to homesickness.

By the end of the summer — the camp started early in June and closes at the end of August — nearly 1,000 cadets will have been trained at HMCS Quadra.

"This is citizenship training with naval background," said one Quadra officer, while trying to analyze the course in simple terms.

Emphasis is on seamanship — there's plenty of sailing, parade training and general drill. There are also sports, such as swimming, PT, volleyball, gymnastics and, yes, the obstacle course. We started that in 1964 and every year we manage to add additional obstacles."

But the youngsters love obstacles, because they represent a challenge to be overcome, one way or another. At the inspection I attended, no cadet gave up. They all finished.

"And that's when we feel it's all worth it," remarked Lt. Cmdr. Alsgard.

The cadets certainly feel it's all worth it, and most of them would like to stay at Quadra for the whole summer. Due to the fact that each group is only allowed to spend two weeks at the base, this is hardly possible.

"But this is one of the most beautiful experiences I've ever had," one Saskatchewan cadet told me. "Of course, at home we have no sea ... just a few lakes. What I really like is the challenges and the sports; the leadership training that we get here and the companionship from other cadets."

"I've sure met some nice guys from B.C. and other parts of Western Canada, that I wouldn't have met otherwise," he said.

Actually, the Quadra camp simply reflects the object of the Royal Canadian Sea Cadets, which is to give boys between the ages of 14 and 18 such sea — and other — training as will develop in them qualities which make for good citizenship and to assist these boys who wish to make the sea their career achieve that ambition. Sea Cadets are sponsored jointly by the Navy League of Canada and the Royal Canadian Navy.

In 1918, the then newly-formed Navy League set itself three aims:

1. To educate Canadians in matters maritime.
2. To aid sailors and their families.
3. To organize volunteer naval brigades for boys and young men to prepare them for service in the navy or merchant navy.

In 1941, in recognition of their contribution to the war effort, Sea Cadets were made the official cadet component of the Royal Canadian Navy and thus given the same status and assistance enjoyed by the army and air cadets.

No cadet, however, is part of the Canadian Armed Forces, nor is anyone obliged in any way to enrol in such forces because of his cadet service.

The Royal Canadian Navy provides uniforms, training aids, including books, and summer training for selected cadets, either through the two-week general training course at Quadra, or by a seven-week trades training course.

Another purpose of the Quadra camp is to give cadets instruction which it is difficult or impossible to teach at the home corps.

Seamanship, 22 rifle shooting, and especially sailing are subjects taught by RCSC officers and RCN personnel who are on Quadra's staff for the summer months. Thirteen RCSC petty officers, who have previously taken and completed an RCN trades training course, serve as assistant instructors, and in addition, 35 handsmen from all over Western Canada are given a handsman course at Quadra.

Cadets at Quadra are selected from as far east as the Manitoba-Ontario border and come in groups, which change every two weeks. The RCN pays for their transportation out and back. While in Quadra they are divided into six divisions and each division is in turn divided into two classes for instructional purposes.

A divisional point system has been established whereby cadets are assessed according to how they keep themselves and their living quarters, and how they do in sports, including sailing, and other inter-divisional activities. Each cadet in the winning division is given a trophy at the end of the two-week training period.

The name Quadra in itself implies tradition.

Juan Francisco de la Bodega Quadra was born in Lima, Peru, about 1744, to a family of Spanish nobility. His father adopted the name Quadra at the request of a relative, Don Antonio de la Quadra.

Capt. Quadra's paternal great-grandmother was Dona Isabel de la Quadra and the addition, in later years, of the same name is thus really a link with the family's past.

Quadra's connection with B.C. began when, as a lieutenant in the Spanish navy he was given command of the schooner Sonora and, in 1775, sent on a voyage of exploration from the Spanish naval base at San Blas (Mexico) to Latitude 58 degrees north.

Later, in 1779, he was given command of another vessel, the Favorita, and sailed north again, this time as far as Prince William Sound (then named, Esenta de Regla by Spanish explorers), and came within view of Mt. St. Elias. Because of the war between Britain and Spain, Spanish explorations ceased in this area until Nootka was occupied by Martinez in 1789.

By 1791, Quadra had risen to the rank of Post Captain, was knighted into the Order of Santiago, and was in command of the Spanish naval establishment at San Blas. Because of his rank and his ability, and doubtless also due to his two previous voyages to the North Pacific, the Viceroy of Mexico appointed him governor of Nootka that year.

His principal task was to negotiate with Captain Vancouver, RN, concerning the restoration of British property and ships in Nootka. In spite of their official difference in point of view regarding these negotiations, Quadra and Vancouver became warm friends.

As a tribute to his friend Quadra, Capt. Vancouver named the tract of land that had first been circumnavigated for us, forming the southwestern side of the Gulf of Georgia, and the southern sides of Johnstone's Straits and the PRINCESS MARY had 42-year coastal career. Now her superstructure serves as a popular Victoria seafood restaurant.

WHAT BECAME of the CPR's PRINCESSES

FIRST of TWO PARTS

Victoria's harbor ghosts are wailing in despair.

For years, Canadian Pacific's "princesses" have slowly been going the way of the romantic sealing and whaling fleets which once graced our waters. Today only Marguerite and Patricia remain of the liners which have been an integral chapter of Pacific Northwest marine lore since the turn of the century.

Now it has been announced that even the familiar buildings and wharves may be doomed by progress. It is a sad ending to one of the city's oldest partnerships. Partnership because as Victoria grew, the fleet of coasters grew also, striding into the future side by side. For 63 years the beautiful steamers have come and gone in the Inner Harbor, sharing prosperity, happiness and heartbreak . . . delivering thousands of tourists, taking thousands of B.C.'s finest during war . . . Even the fabled Klondikers have tramped their decks.

Where have these lovely ladies gone? Will we ever see their like again?

T. W. PATERSON in a two-part series traces the partnership between Victoria and the CPR's coastal fleet

The famous B.C. Coast Steamship Service came into being in 1901, when the CPR bought out Canadian Pacific Navigation Company. Within two years, former riverboat-man Captain J. W. Troup, manager, had initiated complete modernization of the 14-vessel fleet. It was Troup who saw the future was for screw-driven steamships, not the present little paddlewheelers, and ordered Princess Beatrice, first of the bluebloods which would become so well known.

Reported The Colonist: "The magnificent vessel is a lasting monument to the skill of the designers, constructors and employees of the yards, was released from the cradle by the hand of Mrs. Fitzherbert Bullen who, breaking a bottle of champagne, festooned with streamers of white and red, the CPR colors, upon her bows, christened her Princess Beatrice."

"The solidly-built, yet beautiful specimen of the shipbuilders' art, slowly commenced her descent into the element through which she gradually increased her speed, plunging into the waters of Esquimalt Harbor, and resting peacefully upon the bosom of her future home, amidst the cheers of the onlookers almost before they realized a most successful launch had been accomplished. Messrs. Bullen are receiving the hearty congratulations of their friends upon this addition to the local steamship fleet."

Most local dignitaries attended the gala ceremony. There was no dissenting voice when the little wooden steamer was heralded as being "without doubt the finest steamer ever built on the B.C. coast."

Although intended for the Alaskan service, it was Beatrice which started the famous "triangle run" between Victoria, Vancouver and Seattle. This change of plan, which ultimately proved a blessing, resulted from the Clallam tragedy. The American steamer had foundered in Juan de Fuca Strait with great loss of life. Due to public outcry, the CPR was requested to place Beatrice on the route.

The princess soon became known as the fastest ship on the coast. In 1907 she soundly trounced the City of Seattle which had boasted her colors and signalled that she would cross the bows of Beatrice, whose officers responded to the challenge and putting the ship's speed up to 14½ knots, gained a lead which was maintained until the steamers parted company."

Later serving on the Northern run, Beatrice was sold in 1928. Her new owners cut her down to a barge and floating cannery. Then even her graceful hull was scrapped.

While Beatrice was the first princess built for the CPR, the actual forerunner of its coastal fleet was Princess Louise, which came with the CPN's floating stock. Built in New York in 1869, she had rounded the Horn as Olympia. With the 1880s the Hudson's Bay Company brought the paddlewheeler to Victoria. Reduced to a barge in 1900, she ended her days 20 years later at Port Alce.

Second of what was to become a long line of princesses was the May, whose story appeared in these pages June 5.

Princess Victoria followed Beatrice in 1903, and is remembered by many as the finest ship every to ply Northwest waters. Powered by engines that had been intended for a battleship, the beautiful 300-footer showed her trim stern to many a younger vessel in following decades.

PRINCESS ADELAIDE was sold to Greek shippers.

Victoria made her appointed rounds without fail for no less than 47 years. In almost half a century she had but little in speed, sprinting between ports at almost 20 knots.

In 1932 the dowager was completely renovated to accommodate automobiles. The major surgery was extensive and expensive, making her 11 feet wider. It is a good indication of her value to the company when it invested a fortune in the 28-year-old veteran.

Capt. Troup had gambled heavily on her. Many experts had predicted she would be a "white elephant." Happily she made money from the start. Others maintained the 3,200-tonner, then largest to operate locally, would be too big for James Bay.

Consequently, when Princess Victoria had rounded the Horn, on route from her English builder, Troup decided to bring her into Inner Harbor himself. He did so with ease. However, it appears he had to do it several times to silence his critics.

Victoria's superstructure was completed here, under Troup's personal supervision. Among his innovations was a forward observation room, henceforth installed in all princesses.

The triangle run kept her busy for many years, the liner sometimes steaming 90,000 miles a year. "Old Vic" ended her days in the summer Vancouver-Nanaimo trade. Sold in 1950, she fell to the cutting torches. Her streamlined superstructure was ripped off, her sleek hull converted to a box-fuel carrier. Two years later, under tow in Wolfoe Pass, she struck a rock and went down.

Then all was gone but her famous "screaming siren," which was installed in then building Princess of Nanaimo. According to the company, which scoffed at suggestions of sentimentality, it "was the finest navigational whistle ever employed in this region."

Another memento of Victoria is a splendid model prominently displayed in the Maritime Museum.

Built in Glasgow, Princess Charlotte made her debut on the Northwest shipping stage Jan. 11, 1909. Then the largest ship in service here, she soon proved herself the fastest too. Even the "Vic" had to relinquish her hard-won laurels to the young sister. With accommodation for 1,000 day passengers, Charlotte worked the triangle run until 1921, when placed on the Alaska summer cruise. For 10 years she came and went with business-like efficiency. Finally, it was her turn to retire. But not to the junkyard.

Purchased by Greek interests, she was renamed after the distant sea she would then sail. Said a newspaper account: "There was a touch of nostalgic sadness on the Victoria waterfront Saturday afternoon when the St. Mediterranean slipped her lines at Yarrow's Ltd. and sailed out of Esquimalt Harbor."

"Only a few workmen saw her leave, and there was no ceremony, no farewell waves from the dock, nothing. It seemed an empty occasion, undeserved by the vessel."

Steaming half-way round the world to her new home, Charlotte enjoyed a complete refit, which saw her three tall stacks replaced by a single, slanted funnel. She also received a new bridge, bar and cocktail lounge. Then, far from her home waters of B.C., far from the snows of Alaska, Mediterranean served faithfully in romantic azure seas until 1964, when finally scrapped. She was 57.

The year 1910 saw two additions to the CPR coastal fleet, Adelaide and Mary.

Another Glasgow-built princess, 3,100-ton Adelaide served on the triangle run her first 19 years, alternating between day and night runs during winter and summer months. In 1919 she experienced the icy waters of Alaska, when she filled in for Princess Charlotte, then indisposed by mishap.

Two years later, she was refitted for weekly service between Prince Rupert and Vancouver. For a further 17 years, with some side trips, she was a familiar, welcome figure throughout the Inside Passage and Queen Charlotte Sound.

Finally, in September, 1948, the weary princess was laid up at Victoria. Placed on the block, she was bought by the same Greek firm which later purchased Charlotte. Redesignated Angelica, she bade farewell to Victoria in late summer, 1949, bound for the Mediterranean.

Her B.C. service had been long and certainly not uneventful. On the unlucky date of Oct. 13, 1918, she had run aground near the northerly entrance to Active Pass. Her 310 passengers were safely ferried to waiting Princess Alice by schooner. There were no casualties and Adelaide reached port without serious injury.

Ten years later, she piled into a Norwegian freighter in heavy fog near Prospect Point, English Bay. The collision ripped open 120 square feet of her starboard side, flooding her engine room. Repairs to the sum of $60,000 were necessary before she resumed service.

No sooner had she returned to work than, again in fog, she ran down the tug Albert. Happily, she enjoyed peace and quiet—usually—on the Prince Rupert run.

As Angelica, she was refitted to handle 370 passengers: 20 de luxe, 167 first class, 100 second class and 83 third class. She was placed on a weekly run between Crete and Italy. The old coaster which witnessed rocky, fir-studded islands of the Pacific Northwest, still regularly views the legendary isles of Greece.

Although long gone, Princess Mary is still familiar to Victorians. A nautical landmark, one might say.

Built the same year as Adelaide, smaller Mary operated between most of B.C.'s larger ports during her 42-year career. Originally placed on the Alaskan run to replace ill-fated Sophia, she also served as night boat between Victoria and Vancouver. She ended her days plying between Vancouver and Powell River. Mary was 222 feet long at birth, but in 1914 she was cut in two, an additional 40-foot midsection being inserted.

Sold to Union Steamships, her superstructure was removed, the hull employed as an ore barge. She went down off Cape Decision in April, 1954.

... As with Princess Victoria, her trusty whistle was retained, being installed in a Powell River plant. Her bell still announces classes at Westview School. ... A far more familiar memento of the lady is her entire superstructure, now a popular restaurant permanently "dry-docked" overlooking Inner Harbor. Annually, thousands walk her "decks" to enjoy fine sea food.

Princess Alice came in 1911, also a product of the world-renowned Scottish shipyard. Despite a "severe storm when rounding Cape Horn, she arrived here in splendid condition." The 3,100-ton single-funneller soon joined Adelaide on the night run between Victoria and Vancouver. The twins would leave opposite ports each midnight, arriving at 7 a.m.

According to her company history, Alice had, "generally speaking, an uneventful 38-year service. For many years prior to the outbreak of war, she was engaged on the Alaska route, and passengers from all over the world have travelled on her."

"She carried many notables, including members of the royal family. During the war years, while engaged on the triangle route, she carried many members of the armed forces."

Three times during that uneasy period she searched for survivors of missing training planes. Many years before, she had carried the bodies recovered from Princess Sophia. ... When Marguerite and Kathleen were drafted for active service, she went back on the Victoria run. With peace, she was the first CPR vessel to shed her emergency battleship grey.

Retired in 1949, after sailing more than 1,000,000 miles in B.C. waters, Alice was sold to the Greek shipping firm with sister Adelaide. Although not considered "old" by the CPR, they had two strikes against them for continuing Northwest service: They could not carry cars and were too slow for the postwar demand for speedy transportation.

Both princesses were sailed to Greece by crews sent from that country. Because shipyard costs were lower in Greece, planned renovations were done upon their arrival. However, both carried B.C. lumber and materials for their rejuvenation when they sailed from Victoria the last time.

Renamed Aegaeon, Alice served between Piraeus and Venice for nine years, then was converted for five-day cruises in the Aegean Sea. In January of this year she was reported to have been laid up, but would possibly re-enter service this summer.

Said an official of the firm which bought Alice, Adelaide and Charlotte: "They were greatly appreciated in the Mediterranean area for the spaciousness of their public rooms, dining rooms, corridors, etc., as well as for their spacious cabins and their speed."

Princess Sophia joined the fleet in 1912. Placed on the Alaska run, the 2,320-ton Scottish-built liner slammed into Vanderbilt Reef, Lynn Canal, in October, 1918. As rescue ships vainly watched, frustrated by foul weather, Sophia

Start a New Trend
Help your teen-agers set up their own milk bar in your kitchen

Happiness, on a hot summer day, is a cool drink. Summer is the season when cooler food and drink are the order of the day. So let's play it cool with frosty, refreshing drinks.

Of course a tall glass of ice cold milk tops the list because of its high quality protein, vitamins and minerals . . . as well as its creamy-smooth flavor. Encourage the family to help themselves by keeping plenty of milk on hand in the refrigerator.

Little children in Hong Kong or Viet Nam would think themselves in Heaven if they could have all the milk they wanted to drink. Our children, living in this land of plenty, take the blessing of milk for granted. In fact, we sometimes have to resort to subterfuge to get them to drink it. If yours are not fond of "plain" milk, then let's "gild the lily" and dress up this lovely beverage. Let's consider some cool drinks with a milk base.

There is fun in concocting these refreshers. A blender is a fine piece of equipment for this . . . so easy to use that when Mother is short of time she can put one of the other members of the family to work with this fun appliance. If you,

COOL DRINKS . . .

Like me, do not own a blender, you can make all the following drinks with a rotary beater or with your electric mixer. (When mixing liquids with an electric mixer you need to use a deep jug with a splash-proof cover.)

Choose pineapple to please the youngsters at their next milk-and-cookie session. Instant pudding mix, milk and pineapple juice mix up in a jiffy. Pour into pretty glasses or mugs and add a scoop of vanilla ice cream for the best-ever Pineapple Flip.

PINEAPPLE FLIP . . . makes four to five servings. One (approx. 3 1/4-oz.) package instant lemon pudding mix, 1 cup pineapple juice, 3 cups cold milk and vanilla ice cream. Combine lemon pudding mix, pineapple juice and milk until well blended. Pour into tall glasses and top with scoop of vanilla ice cream.

LEMON REFRESHER . . . two eggs, 1/2 cup white sugar, 3 Tbsp. lemon juice and 2 cups cold milk. Beat eggs well, gradually beat in sugar. Beat until light and fluffy. Add lemon juice and milk, continue beating until blended. Serve immediately. Makes two to three servings.

SUNSHINE COOLER . . . 1/2 cup concentrated frozen orange juice, 1/2 cup sugar, 4 cups cold milk and nutmeg. Combine orange concentrate and sugar. Divide mixture evenly into four glasses. Fill each glass with milk, stir to blend. Sprinkle top with nutmeg.

LEMON SHERBET FROST . . . measure milk into a tall glass. Add sherbet and stir. Makes one serving . . . 1/2 cup cold milk and 1 scoop lemon sherbet.

And here is one that should be popular with all the small fry . . .

BUSY BEE PEANUT SHAKE . . . makes six servings. 1/2 cup liquid honey, 1/2 cup cream-style peanut butter and 1 quart (5 cups) cold milk. Beat the honey and peanut butter with a rotary or electric beater until well blended. Gradually beat in 1/2 cup of the milk. Pour in remaining milk, beat and pour into glasses.

If your teen-ager thinks that drinking milk is unsophisticated why not start a new trend in your neighborhood . . . let them set up their own "milk bar" in the kitchen where they can serve mild drinks. The whole family will probably want to try their hand at inventing new drinks. The necessary "makings" can be kept on hand . . . milk, sugar syrup, fruit syrup, vanilla essence, sherbet and ice cream. Tall glasses and straws of course.

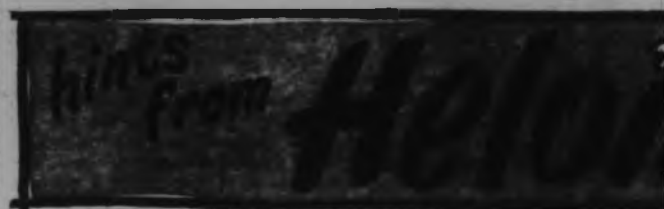

It is well to remember that sugar does not dissolve readily in iced beverages. So keep some sugar syrup on hand. This keeps well in a covered jar in the refrigerator. The proportions are 2 cups sugar to 1 cup water. The syrup must be concentrated in order to have the maximum sweetening power. Boil sugar and water together for five minutes, cool and store. One tablespoon of this syrup will sweeten a tall drink.

A flavored syrup may be made with any ripe fruit . . . crush 2 cups fruit, add 1 1/2 cups sugar and mix well. Simmer over low heat, stirring constantly until soft, about five minutes. Press through a fine sieve. Store in covered jar in refrigerator. This makes a

DEAR HELOISE:
 Recently I was putting polish on my toenails and my daughter asked me, "Why do you use those pencils on your feet?"

I tried to tell her that when you want to polish your toenails, if you place a pencil OVER your big toe, UNDER the next two toes and OVER the last two toes, your polish will dry without smearing. Also, with the toes divided this way, the polish is far easier to apply.

She thought that this idea should be passed along so that others might enjoy the hint. It truly works.

Amelita

By golly, it works! Thanks from the bottom of our heart. I'd love to know how you got the fantastic idea.

To prevent a mess in my oven when baking fruit pies, I just set my pie pan in the center of a pizza sheet, then bake.

Young adults love the word "sophisticated", whether applied to manners, dress, food or drink.
Prestige is their delight. Today I'd like to introduce them to a flavoring with lots of prestige Angostura Bitters, from the land of the Calypso . . . (Port of Spain, Trinidad) comes this magical, tropical flavoring. A secret blend of spices it is especially adaptable for soft drinks (as well as adding that subtle zing to Father's cocktails).

WHITE CAP . . . into a tall glass put 2 ice cubes, 1/2 cup cold milk, 3 dashes Angostura Bitters and 1/2 cup lemon-lime carbonated soda.
Stir and serve immediately while "head" is fresh.

PURPLE COW PUNCH . . . 2 quarts chocolate milk, 1 28-oz. bottle black raspberry soda, 4 tsp. Angostura Bitters and chocolate sprinkles. Have chocolate milk and soda well chilled. At serving time combine all ingredients in a punch bowl. Sprinkle chocolate sprinkles on top.
Makes 16 servings.

For pure summertime enjoyment treat yourself to Iced Coffee Trinidad. Add 2 or 3 dashes of Angostura to each glass of iced coffee, then add a small scoop of chocolate ice cream and stir to mix.

Here is another citrus cooler, its flavor enhanced with Angostura . . .

HOT WEATHER PUNCH . . . 1 tin (6-oz.)
frozen orange juice, 1/2 cup lemon juice, 1 tin (6-oz.)
frozen grape juice, 1 28-oz. bottle sparkling water, 2 tsp. Angostura Bitters and lemon slices.
Reconstruct the juices and pour over ice cubes or a block of ice in a punch bowl. Add sparkling water, Angostura and lemon slices. If a sweeter punch is desired 1/2 cup sugar syrup may be added before the sparkling water. Yield 20 servings.

Do keep a bottle of these aromatic Bitters on hand. Besides adding zest and character to countless drinks, soft or alcoholic, Angostura adds a subtle, not easily identifiable, flavor to soups, gravies, casseroles, egg dishes, salads and desserts.

I hope no member of your family has a diet problem of any kind. If, however, there is a need to follow a low-sodium regime, Angostura is a blessing. Here is an item taken from the American Journal of Nutrition after a study on methods of making the low-sodium diet more acceptable . . . "We have found that a significant advance in giving salt-free foods the tang and bite that they usually lack is the use of Angostura Bitter hitherto employed almost entirely in the preparation of alcoholic drinks. The bitters pack up at once the flat taste of salt-free soups. They may be used in any number of salt-free foods to increase flavor." Sodium content of Angostura is extremely low.

Bride's Corner

The freezing compartment of a refrigerator must have been especially designed for the bride or the housewife who cooks only for two. A pie, an angel food cake, a layer cake, can all be cut into meal-size portions, each wrapped separately in foil and stored in the freezing compartment of your refrigerator. Labelled, of course, so they can be identified.

Make the full recipe for a casserole, even though it is too much for one meal. Freeze half for that day you return home late from shopping. It will reheat while you are setting the table and tossing the salad. Baked beans, stew, soup, all freeze well. Use square containers to save space.

Bread is so much nicer when fresh . . . with only two, it takes so long to use even one loaf. Cut it in half, wrap and freeze for fresh bread on demand.

THOSE VENETIAN BLINDS

DEAR HELOISE:
While getting ready to clean my Venetian blinds the other day, I suddenly discovered I had no commercial cleansers, so I put some warm water in a pail and poured half a cup of kerosene on top. I used this to clean my Venetian blinds.
Honest to goodness, I have never had such wonderful results in my entire life.
They were spotless with no energy required.

Mildred Jacobs

Dear Mildred:
Thank you for passing along this hint. I tried it on my metal Venetian blinds, and it works like a charm!
There was absolutely no need to rinse the blinds with plain water afterwards. I just took another soft piece of old towel and wiped them, and they gleamed.

NEW RECIPE IDEA

DEAR HELOISE:
Like most housewives, when I spot a good recipe in a magazine or paper, I cut it out with the good intention of giving my family a mealtime treat.

But somehow, once the recipe is filed in my numerous cookbooks and recipe files, it is forgotten.

Recently I hit on a plan of not putting these new recipes away until I had tried them at least once.

I tape them to the inside of my kitchen cupboard doors. If there is a picture, I leave it attached to the recipe.

They are colorful, out of the way, and interesting to guests.

And, best of all, my family is enjoying some really new dishes.

This also works for household decorating ideas, using

By JOHN SHAW

It was on the heather moors a sharp walk above Greenock that we watched the little black and white Border Collie—Amy, or Amie, was her name—bringing home her fleecy charges; 50 or more ewes and lambs, for sure, there were, and scattered over the folds of the land far out of sight of the shepherd.

He was an old man in any event, and in the soft rain of that spring evening I doubt if he could see more than a hundred paces. And the sun was low, besides.

But he had the greatest faith in Amy. He sent her away with a quiet word, and she scudded over the turf with shrill little barks of excitement, leaping the small depressions and was out of sight of our sharper eyes in seconds.

And then we could no longer hear her. She was a quiet working animal.

Breeding and Training Make a Perfect Partnership Between the Lucky Man Who Owns One and

THE WORKING DOG

In a remarkably short time we could see the sheep, half a dozen cresting a rise of land, and then a dozen more, and then another—they were coming in from half the points of the compass, and they'd stop to graze when Amy ceased to press them.

But never for long.

The little collie was never still an instant, racing back and forth, leaping at the stragglers so that they raced in a moment of panic. From one flank to another she dashed, and the sheep converged on the old man who stood at the gate at the top of the path that led down to the farm fold below us.

When they were streaming through the gap in the stone fence, Amy crouched, still as death, her head on her forepaws. Only her quick brown eyes moved.

Suddenly she was up and away again, springing on to the backs of the silly creatures, though her flying feet seemed scarcely to touch them. Then she was down and bounding after the straying few at the tail end of the flock.

It was the first time either of us had seen a Scottish sheep dog work, and McGregor was inordinately proud, so that one would have thought he had something to do with it: the skill and the speed and the incredible efficiency of this small animal.

A working dog is always a joy to see, and although few will deny there is much in the breeding and the instinct of the animal, still a trainer can take a little credit. They do, whether they deserve it or not.

You will find all kinds on Vancouver Island. Magnificent breeds, and although most folk have their preferences — next to Amy and her border collie strain I like the big Labrador retriever — all or any of them have desirable qualities, extraordinary sagacity and unswerving loyalty.

I recently met some of them at the field trials.

M. H. Babcooke writes about one aspect of

Sunday, July 10, 1908

development and increasing interest in the field of sporting dogs when he discusses the Island Pointer Club, currently sponsoring four field trials a year, open to all of the upland game dogs of pointing varieties.

Two of these trials are championship events, he says, under the rules of the Canadian Kennel Club, and the other two are sanctioned by that organization. In these latter field championship points to winners are not provided.

The Island Pointer Club held two days of championship field trials in May and on Nov. 19-20 will hold another.

These trials comprise three stakes: Pun-derby and open shooting dog stake. The puppies are 18 months or less; the derby dogs are under two years and up to 30 months; and the open shooting dog stake is open to all comers over the age of six months.

Normally these championship trials draw an average of 60 entries and require a full weekend for completion of competition.

Competing dogs are required to run a 30-minute heat in the form of a brace. The dogs are selected to run in pairs only on a course which normally will take 22 minutes to complete, says Mr. Babcooke. On completion the competitors are brought into a field of about 20 acres where two pheasants have been released. The dogs then have eight minutes to find the birds.

There is no time to waste and these singularly skilled animals don't waste it.

In the senior stake the bird dogs are required to find and point their game in championship style and they must remain steady to wing and shot when the bird is flushed.

What a test that is for a highly sensitive animal! He must stand not only against the sudden clatter of flight and shrill alarm but remain steady as a grenadier under the explosion of the shot.

"Competition is keen and of very high calibre in all three stakes. Half of those entered are usually American-owned, professionally trained and handled. This, however, does not stop the amateurs from winning, and the members of the Island Pointer Club seem always to finish a trial with a high percentage of wins. Some of the club dogs are winning trials in other parts of Canada and the United States," says Mr. Babcooke.

Mr. Babcooke knows whereof he speaks. He owns Field Trial Champion Bellview Fred, an English setter. This beautiful creature has won field trials in New Jersey, Washington, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Alberta, as well as at home in B.C. field trials.

Pepper Hill's Wildlife is an English Pointer owned by youthful Raymond Jones of Brentwood. He won the puppy stake held in Ladner, B.C. last March.

"This is a dog," says Mr. Babcooke, "with a lot of style both running and on point which should develop into an excellent field trial dog."

Belle Etoile de Thorsen is a Brittany spaniel, owned by Donald Thorsen in Victoria. The breed is exceptionally good in field trials, and Belle Etoile has won in Washington as well as B.C.

A promising aspirant is Wolfsgalder Dax von Speer, a German short-haired pointer, owned by William Walton, Victoria, and rated one of the finest puppies in field trial competition in B.C. Dax won the Island puppy stake in November, 1965, and the tough derby stake at Ladner in March of this year.

His shooting was remarkable for "a tremendous, hard-driving back course and a style pointing his birds that made his owner jump for joy," said an observer. But Dax stood stock still.

The thing about these field trials is that they bring continued improvement in the quality of upland game dogs in the province. The matured dogs capable of competing in the shooting dog stakes run and hunt with superb spirit and "it is their lofty style and staunchness when pointing their game which really thrill a bird dog man."

These dogs are trained to stop on an inadvertent flush until they are sent on by their handlers.

"These high qualities can only be achieved by selective breeding," Mr. Babcooke says. And he is right, of course.

But there is something to be said for the patient trainer.

Elmer Dodds explains about the origin and history of the Island Pointer Club, which resulted from a decision in 1960 by pointing dog enthusiasts that they were missing out on a lot of entertainment their animals were capable of providing.

Only during a few weeks in the fall were the dogs and their owners active in the field, hunting the lovely autumn bush. For 10 months it was a humdrum life for the hunters, although they made their careful preparations.

Out of this inaction came reaction, and the idea of a club for all pointing breeds came to fruition. The challenge of the trials kept men and dogs in condition, and the trials themselves provided excitement and the thrill of achievement. More important, owners could see the steady improvement in their charges; and this was incentive enough to continue.

Mr. Dodds was the club's first president, and they went to their first field trials in December, 1960, at the old Colwood race track site. The judge was the late Tom Brown, a great English Setter man, but a lover of all the pointing breeds and the sport they represent.

The trials stimulated the growth of the club, and the interest of "all the family" as well as the proud owner.

In April, 1965, the club had the distinction of sponsoring the largest licensed field trial and show ever held in Canada. It was held at Cassidy airport, near Nanaimo, and although the bulk of awards went to American competitors, the event gave great encouragement to the club's organizers. They had come a long way in a short time.

It's a safe bet they'll go a lot farther.

One of the things which might encourage public interest and spur club members to even greater endeavor would be larger public attendance at the trials. It should be possible to find a site which would allow space for spectators, for this is a sporting spectacle that needs to be seen to be appreciated.

Once a young man, or an older one, for that matter, has watched these fine dogs work he is going to feel compelled to participate. It isn't just the shooting. It's the thrill of the hunt, of course, but principally it is the "contested" and understanding between the man and the dog, and the inspired pursuit of perfection by these great breeds that wins the hearts of humans.

IF YOU WIN KING FISHERMAN CONTEST

You Will Fall in Love With An Airline and a Nation

Maybe you'll win that expenses-paid trip for two to Chile, the top hidden weight prize in The Daily Colonist King Fisherman Contest this year.

If you do, be warned: You'll fall in love with an airline and a nation. And you'll be glad there are two of you, to back up each other's yarns of the greatest fisherman's paradise this world can offer.

Your love affairs will start with the Canadian Pacific Airlines DC-8 jet flight, via two of the greatest and most glamorous Latin American capitals, Mexico City and Lima, Peru. You'll be amazed at the swift and smooth transition 8,000 miles down the map across the Equator, roughly three times, in actual flying hours, that it takes to drive from Victoria to Campbell River and back. Pampered with wonderful meals, refreshments and service—we know, my wife and I and two babies; we've made the trip! You'll arrive in Santiago, Chile's capital, relaxed, rested and ready for some surprises.

First in impact will, perhaps, be the fact that neither Santiago nor Chile as a whole is tropical. In contrast to the popular concept of South America, you'll be far south of "the line" with the sun edging towards the north at noon, and Santiago and middle Chile have climates very similar to that of lower Vancouver Island, only better. Summers, our winter months, are warm by day; but pleasantly cool at night, or even cold, in the higher altitudes where you may plan to fish. The great Andean peaks which will have marched with you all down the continent will be snow-covered, and Portillo, three hours' drive from the capital, is the continent's top skiing centre, famed for its ideal weather and snow condition — The World Ski Championships will be held there this coming November. You certainly won't need tropical suits, but warm pullovers and a raincoat can come in mighty handy.

Santiago will also surprise you with its North European atmosphere. The Chileans like to call themselves "the English of South America" and look to Europe rather than the U.S.A. as their cultural guide. The centre of the city is well laid out and compact with dignified stone office and government buildings, fine arcades, broad tree-shaded avenues, parks and pleasant residential suburbs. Its population is a blend of many races besides the Latin, with strong British, German and other European strains under the overlay of Spanish language and customs. The Chileans version of Spanish is a tough one, with the ends of words apt to be chopped off, but try it—even the word "Gracias" for "thank you" works wonders—and you'll find the most educated people speak some English.

... says George Vincent who tells about Chile as he saw it

You'll find too that the Chileans are more restrained than most South Americans in expressing their emotions, but you'll be impressed by their friendly manner and by the sense of freedom.

Chile is a democracy. Though it is wise to carry your passport, entry formalities are minimal, there is none of the endless requests for "documents" that one meets in some other lands, and the national police force, the Carabineros, is the best of the continent. Maybe, by the end of your visit, you'll feel that the shamrock, instead of the lovely copihue flower, should be the national symbol of this longest and thinnest land on the face of the globe. O'Higgins, pronounced "O'Heens," was the national hero who liberated Chile from the Spanish yoke. His name is everywhere on streets and buildings, including the spectacular Avenida, over a hundred yards wide, with its fine gardens and statuary, that runs for two miles through the heart of this two-million soul city.

Impatient though you may be to seek out Chile's finny monsters — with the urge maybe stimulated by the giant goldfish wallowing in plastic bags that hawkers display in profusion on the mosaiced sidewalks — you'll be tempted to linger in Santiago. It has so much to offer besides its glorious setting against the backdrop of the Andes — entertainment in the way of theatres, ballet, golf, horse-racing and the usual night-life of a sophisticated city. There are fine shops where such national products as leathers, goods, handicrafts, and the lovely "ponchos" the swarms of smartly-dressed pretty girls wear with a charming swing, can be bought for a fraction of the price they would cost at home.

Imported goods are expensive, because of the very high customs duties and North American cars rare, at five times the price we pay here. But there are plenty of taxis, except when it rains — most, being uninsured, then tend to vanish from the slippery streets — and little, almost skeleton cotroneletta autos are everywhere, while whole streets are devoted to the parking of motor scooters.

In Santiago, as all through Chile, you need not worry about the diseases of the tropics; though in some areas it is advisable to be careful with drinking water. We used Halazone tablets for purifying it all through the continent and never suffered — and inoculation against typhoid before you leave Canada is a wise precaution.

As for food — you'll drool! Eating is a status symbol and Chileans do their best to maintain the status. There are restaurants to serve all purses, with tender steaks at a fraction of North American prices, plus superb native wines that cost little more than a cup of coffee. And the beer — "cerveza" to you, in Chile — is wonderful.

Be venturesome, foodwise, with such dishes as "cassuela de ave" — a national favorite consisting of chicken, potatoes, corn, rice, onion and green peas, served in casseroles. You are likely to rave, as we did, over chirimoya, a non-exportable fruit the size of a baseball, with a warty skin that belies its delicious taste. Try empanadas; pastries wrapped around chopped up meats, fruits and spices.

And don't forget the seafoods — "congriso", a pink-fleshed fish; the succulent centolla crabs that look like giant spiders and even the sea-urchins — opened and eaten raw. Mariscos, too, are worth a dare — an uncooked mixture of shellfish, edible seaweeds and crustaceans. If you can ignore the little fellow who paps out a beak and squeaks as you're about to pry him from his shell.

You may find meal hours a bit disconcerting at first, though you'll soon adjust — breakfast and lunch at North American times, but then an enormous tea, "onces," in late afternoon, and dinner not until 9 p.m. or nearly midnight. Though the siesta has, theoretically, been recently abolished by law, city Chileans are night-hawks and in the early hours of the morning you are likely to still find the streets of the larger towns swarming with people.

Near Santiago, too, there are many attractions. The excellent 90-mile highway to Valparaíso and Vina del Mar on the coast, runs through a glorious countryside of rolling hills and meadows, covered with golden California poppies in spring and early summer and with little villages reminiscent of England's Devon. Both the incredible variety and quantity of wild flowers and cultivated varieties are one of the glories of Chile. Valparaíso, the principal West Coast seaport of South America, has a famed history as the first port of call for the great windjammers that rounded the Horn from the Atlantic. It is the main base for the Chilean Navy, a proud, stout little fleet, the best on the continent, built on and steadfastly maintaining British Royal Navy traditions.

Ten minutes beyond Valparaíso by a splendid waterfront drive, Vina offers its fine beaches with their bikini-clad beauties and flapping pelicans, and luxury hotels; the haunt of high society and the diplomatic corps of the capital; also its ornate casino — gambling, along with soccer football, is a national passion. On the drive back to Santiago at night, with the lights of Valparaíso a huge golden collar around its bay, you'll meet the "casineros" — taxis hurtling their clients down from Santiago to test their fortunes.

In Chile, for all its excellent train, long-distance buses and LAN-Chile, the highly efficient national airline, horse and oxen still predominate as picturesque means of transport in rural areas, and your horsepower may well be hay instead of gasoline when your boat is finally towed to some lovely lake.

Let us hope good luck will take you through Middle Chile, south of the capital, squeezed between the Andes and the Pacific. It is the nation's breadbasket, where most of the eight million population lives — a land of vines, fruit orchards, rice paddies, rushing trout streams (we caught our big ones there!) and vast flower-carpeted meadows where fat cattle roam, always with the great snow-capped volcanoes in the distance.

Here you may well witness a Chilean rodeo, with its picturesque "hauso" cowboys, with their traditional fringed black leather leggings, flat-crowned sombreros, vividly-patterned short ponchos and enormous spurs with rowels as big as saucers. It is a superb display of horsemanship, with techniques quite different to those of its counterparts in Canada.

Afterwards comes feasting and the "cueca" — the national dance. Start practising with a hummerchief, which is its essential feature. Your partner will have one too, and it is wonderful what a flick of the wrist can express! There will be singing and enormous wine-drinking, but rarely a drunk — Educated Chileans are apt to measure the quality of a man, not by the amount he drinks, but by his ability to carry it!

One could spend a lifetime in this peaceful and colorful countryside, and on through the land of the Araucanian Indians and "Forest Chile" southward, for over a thousand miles right to that last, lone, lovely wild frontier, Patagonia, at the tip of the continent.

But the Lake District calls us, and the word is TROUT. Originally imported and growing to enormous size — RAINBOW, BROWNS, AND BROOK TROUT — they await you and the fishermen they have drawn from all over the globe, in the vast network of lakes and streams that stretches for three hundred miles among the Andean foothills. The most famed trout fishing centre is Pucon on Lake Villarica and the Trancura River which enters into this lake. There is Ranco Lake, 95 miles southeast of the port of Valdivia, in Forest Chile, reputed to be one of the best, and the San Pedro River; also the Quinchali, famous for its very large rainbow trout.

There are hundreds more rivers and lakes that will give wonderful sport, and for those whose love is brook fishing, to which this writer confesses, there are small streams it is a delight to wade in and contemplate, some near Santiago itself. An excellent official Fishing Guide is issued by the Tourist Department of the State Railways of Chile, which can be obtained by writing or on arrival in Santiago, with ample directions as to routes, means of travel, and accommodation.

Chileans are the most outdoor race of South America; they head out to camp and fish much as we do. The excellent lakeside resorts and fishing camps can match anything we have. Internal train and bus travel is very cheap in terms of dollars and many sports areas are served by regular aerservices or chartered aircraft.

According to the latest available information, fishing any lake, river or stream for trout is permissible from Oct. 15 to April 15. Fishermen must obtain licenses from the department of fisheries, the Carabineros (Police Force), country governors, or game and fish associations. These licenses are provided for one season, while there is also a tourist license for one month, which is obtainable for a fee of approximately $1. But it is advisable to check with the nearest Chilean Consulate before you head south as, like everywhere else, regulations are subject to change.

Travel by comfortable passenger launches on many of the lakes is a delight for the tourist and photographer. For those who care to reach it, guides and pack-mules can take you to almost untouched waters. But check on the closed seasons and license regulations before you head south. Chile has them, and like everywhere else, they are subject to change.

If you want sea fishing, the northwest coast of Chile off Tocopilla and Iquique is famed for albacora and marlin and there are dozens of other varieties.

There are also a few things to remember: You'll be in a land in many ways like ours, but also, in many ways, different in manners and attitudes. Etiquette counts. Family life, respect for parents and courtesy to elders are still strong. Most people of any substance have servants, often many of them, and the sense of "class" is much greater than here. Chile has her social and economic problems just as we do, some that the stranger has difficulty in comprehending, and is sufficiently Latin for "manana" to play its part.

There's a warm spot for foreigners — even though many Chileans are out lives galloping about times, wopping dog-team bit of enlightening. Rest come back with a wonderful people as w the best holiday of

To Save a Bit of Wilderness

Reviewed by ALEC MERRIMAN

The Last Valley is a story about the defence of American wilderness by an embattled few against the despoiling forces of "progress" and profit.

Locale of this novel by Ben Haas is set in a wooded valley in the mountains of Appalachia where the Crowder family has protected the forests and the streams for more than 200 years against all intruders.

For years the Crowder family fought off intruders and would-be developers, with guns when necessary.

Then Skyline Power decided it wanted to dam Crowder Valley to produce more power, ostensibly to set Greenway County's lagging economy in full gear. But the handful of opponents, led by Greenway's war hero, General Gordon "Bamboo" Ballard, were able to put together a case to show that Skyline really wanted the valley dammed to provide more cheap power for its parent company in the adjoining state, Consolidated Metals & Smelting, one of the big users of electricity in the country.

The Crowders didn't want to sell their Crowder Valley and the story of their fight to keep it makes a superbly dramatic novel.

But this book is more than an interesting novel.

It is an eloquent and vivid story of the struggle to save just a little bit of wilderness, a story that applies so much to British Columbia today.

The scene of this story, could just as easily have been the Peace River the Columbia Valley, or Vancouver Island's own Strathcona Park.

It is a story we know so well.

At times we might just as well have been reading our own scrapbook of news stories we have covered. As we read the nearly 500 pages of this novel we thought of the time we rowed on beautiful, untouched wilderness Buttle Lake and coached by conservationist Wil Reid landed a 4½-pound fighting rainbow on fly rod . . . and on the way back to camp we talked about B.C. Power Commission plans to dam Buttle Lake . . . and we thought about the two years of public hearings and protests against the dam, which ended in stringent clearing and grubbing restrictions on the dam builders, most of which has been negated since Western Mines have been operating in that area.

We thought of Wenner-Gren's application to take over vast British Columbia natural resources in the Peace River.

We thought of the emotion-packed early morning press conference we attended with three others in the office of then B.C. Power Commission manager Lee Briggs when he told of political interfering in the management of the commission and broke down in tears under the strain. Fired for his outbursts he later became a senior adviser to the Little Book, Little Subject

Lord Eccles in Half-Way to Faith has written a little book on a very large subject. His scholarly intellectual sensitive mind has developed a most interesting piece of introspection. He approaches the gospels with the inquiring mind of a non-believer, as a masterpiece of literary art. His analogy of his emotional response to a great work of art and his reading of the gospels in this light "love comes first and understanding second" leaves the reader with much food for thought.

This little book is most timely as today more people than ever are groping to gain a new insight into the basic issues of life. "Every time a computer can be coaxed into answering a new set of questions,

We thought of the many long hours we spent covering the Shrum Commission hearings which led to a new B.C. Hydro Authority.

We thought of the legislative committee hearings on public access and more recently the legislative committee hearings studying mining within Strathcona Park.

We thought of the communities and people being displaced by hydro development on the Columbia River.

The drama of all these British Columbia events have their parallel in The Last Valley.

The United States hasn't too many "last valleys" left and that country is now looking towards British Columbia for its water.

British Columbia has a number of "last valleys" left, but hungry exploiters of our natural resources are callously swallowing them up.

The Last Valley by Ben Haas is not only a novel. It is a book to make one think about the future. A book that should be read by British Columbia's Premier Bennett, Recreation Minister Kiernan, Lands and Forests Minister Williston, Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell, Opposition Leader Robert Statchan and all conservationists.

In the story by Haas a former newspaper writer, Russell Grant writes a story that stirs the fighting blood of lawyer Al Lieberman, who thinks the Crowders and General Ballard don't have any chance of fighting the dam, but who gets so incensed that he agrees to take their case, although normally he is hired to fight the battles of the big power companies.

"This may be a civil proceeding to them, but to me it's a criminal case and I'm the prosecuting attorney," Lieberman said before he appeared before the public utilities commission to plead the case for Crowder Valley. "The only hope we've got is to convict Skyline Power for grand larceny of the public resources of this state—and we've got to do it so clearly and definitely and in such an open-and-shut way that not even the most prejudiced commissioner will have any excuse for saying 'Not Guilty,'" he said.

That is what he tried to do and the story about how he went about it should be required reading for every British Columbian at this particular period in this province's history. The story has quite a surprise ending.

the questions it cannot answer become of greater importance," or "The more that is discovered about the laws of nature, the more interested thoughtful man becomes in the problems to which these laws do not apply, i.e. On what occasions should we drop an atomic bomb?"

Half-Way to Faith is sure to provoke constructive thinking amongst both the theologians and the laity. In this day and age when introspection is becoming a popular and accepted pastime amongst both young and old, I feel this book will gain a wide readership. This is not an easy book to read because it forces the reader to evaluate his thinking in the face of valid and divergent points of view, but this is a book that should be read. — ROGER SPURLING.

Offbeat Tourists

Passport to Adventure is a good irritant for itchy feet. True to the American tourists' tradition, the Scotts overwhelm the reader with the scope of their travels from shooting duck in India, to hunting polar bear in the Arctic, to a medieval boar hunt in Spain.

However the Scotts do it with a difference, they are only interested in the off-beat attractions of the countries they visit and go to great lengths to identify themselves as travellers and not tourists.

With apparently unlimited finances and a series of good local contacts around the globe, the Scotts set out to discover the unusual, with some rather interesting results. Even the casual reader who is not particularly interested in shooting teal in Ceylon or eating fertilized duck eggs in the Philippines, or relishes the stimulating experience of having snake, dog or octopus for dinner can learn much from Scott's book.

By applying Scott's approach to travel and adding a dash of imagination plus personal preferences, you too can become a traveller not a tourist.

If you can stand the pace, Passport to Adventure should provide some ideas for the traveller who wants to do something different.

To briefly touch on the personal lives of people in a foreign land may be much more rewarding than a procession of monuments and historic sites. — ROGER SPURLING.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

A Tale of Two Families in An Alberta Community

We began Honey in the Rock, our first review of a work of fiction, with some hesitation.

We had found evaluating non-fiction books to be fairly straightforward. But a novel — in which every sentence, incident and character is the product of blood, sweat and tears — created a problem: Even if not impressed with the book, how could we condemn the result of such work and hope? Particularly when we hope to someday achieve such a goal?

Finally we decided to offer a preface and let you decide yourselves whether you would like to read it.

According to an enclosed resume, Honey in the Rock "is a tale of two families — the Lenuks, and the Zwicks — of the lives of the parents and the children in an Alberta community that is dominated by a seemingly strict and narrow religion. The 'Rock' is the dry, windswept prairie land; the 'Honey' the people who are its victims, people who possess courage, warmth and kindness. Honey in the Rock is the name of an old evangelical hymn, beloved in the little community church, and is a fitting title to underline the unique contrast brought out in the story."

One small point with which we took exception is the reference to Lady of the Valley being "dominated" by its "seemingly strict and narrow religion." Granted, religion is an important part of the people here, but we hardly thought them dominated. . . .

Honey in the Rock takes place between September, 1936, and the following June. This is the term of school taught by green young Dan Root, who arrives in the isolated valley a stranger, and leaves a veteran of the peoples' emotions and experiences. He is not the only one who grows up in those busy 10 months.

Don't let the book's setting mislead you. Unlike the many books about small towns which have become popular in recent years, Miss van der Mark's certainly isn't an expose. She writes honestly and powerfully, but there are only two passages which one might term love scenes. The first is a seconds-long attempt at assault. The second, despite its romantic setting of a hayloft, is just as tame. Honey in the Rock need never fear being "banned in Boston!"

Thus, it all comes down to personal preference. If you want a pleasant two hours' believable and provocative reading, you should enjoy Honey in the Rock.

We did.—T. W. PATERSON.

Impressive Science Fiction

We approached this collection of short stories with curiosity, if not enthusiasm.

Not that we had anything against SF 7 before reading it, but because, aside from Rod Serling's defunct television series, Twilight Zone, we are not too keen on science fiction. We have to confess to being just too square for a subject which knows no limits; physical, spiritual. . . .

But, as in most cases of preconceived notions, we were pleasantly disarmed. If not converted, well . . . impressed.

NEW WRITINGS IN SF 7:
Edited by John Carnell; General Publishing Co., Ltd.; 190 pages; $3.75.

SF 7 means the seventh volume of previously unpublished science fiction gems by the field's top writers. Whether one likes SF or not, one must admit the represented authors are craftsmen.

SF 7 offers seven short (some not-so-short) stories by James White, Douglas R. Mason, Robert Presslie, William F. Temple, John Rankine, R. W. Mackelworth, and Keith Roberts. These names are probably familiar to SF buffs.

SF 7 also offers quite a range of locales, all the way from outer space in centuries hence, to the present. We particularly enjoyed Robert Presslie's "The Night of the Seventh Finger," and "A Touch of Immortality," by R. W. Mackelworth. Here, again, our strait-laced imagination bares itself, for these two tales are of the Twilight Zone breed.

We consider this book — particularly at this price — an excellent gift for anyone interested in science fiction.—T. W. PATERSON.

keep, the price came down every 60 minutes. The bell was rung on the hour to note each reduction.

Sometimes the Marlowes were able to be of considerable help to their tropic community, as witness the occasion on which it came to their notice that the souvenir vendors who went out on lighters to the liners anchored in the roadstead, as well as the taxi drivers on land, were seriously robbing the tourists. The Marlowes took the matter in hand, secured warehouses on the docks where stalls for merchandise could be set up, got the governor to open the new place officially, put a Creole woman in charge, and saw that prices were stabilized. They also coped with the erring taxi drivers.

Eventually Marlow was due to retire. The family went back to England, with the exception of the eldest girl, Sylvia, who was teaching school in the Barbadoes. But once home again, the Bank of England approached Marlow to take charge of their foreign exchange department in Glasgow. He took it on for a while, but it was hard and confining work, and his health suffered. It was decided that South Africa might be the answer.

But now there was another war, and travelling was almost totally restricted. Finally they were advised that passage might be arranged, but it must be kept completely hush-hush, and they must be kept to go on 24-hour notice. On tenterhooks, they waited. A telephone call came . . . and they simply took off in the blackout, like thieves in the night, said Constance. Even the driver of their bus didn't know where he was going, but followed the verbal directions of an officer with a very handy revolver, and landed them at last at a pitch-dark Liverpool dock!

They arrived at Durban on Christmas Eve, and every available lodging place was full up. However, they had been in touch with an organization known as the 1820 Settlers Association. This efficient group found them temporary quarters, and later a splendid home with a gentleman whose wife had left him! He put spacious rooms, servants, cars, garden and swimming pool at their disposal, and they were there for some seven months.

They decided to build for themselves in Umbali, and bought property. Then they found they couldn't get building materials. So they began to think of Vancouver Island again, where at least there was always plenty of lumber. The trouble was, the land they had purchased was uncleared and difficult of resale . . . until a friend have opened up wide. In this way they will be fully cooked, but not over-cooked, and they will be about as tender as it is possible to get clams. Over-cooking only tends to toughen the meat.

Serve them piping hot right on the shell, lift them off with a fork, and dip in a little butter with perhaps just a faint touch of HP sauce. Stop your drooling! and just eat and enjoy yourself. Get out and get some as soon as you can. It makes a nice outing and they really are "Dee-Scrumptious".

slipped from her perch. She went straight to the bottom with 343 passengers and crewmen. Not one survived.

One early princess, Ena, led a less glamorous life than her better-known sisters — rather cousins. For little 1,368-ton Ena was a freighter. She worked for 21 years until sold for use as a floating cannery. Later reduced to a barge, Ena was lost at sea. . . .

Other princesses would join the CPR fleet in following years. All would earn the affections of those who sailed in them, or watched them depart under a wheeling escort of seagulls from Imer Harbor. . . . Others, like Sophia, would sail away, never to return, and be mourned like the faithful friends they were.

in the police department arranged to have a squad of his road workers take over. Swiftly tidied up by a small army of prisoners, the land sold with no difficulty.

At long last, after many vicissitudes, the Marlowes wound up once more on Quamichan Lake. But the property was too big for them, and bit by bit they disposed of it and came to Victoria. They were living on Rockland Avenue when Marlow died.

Today the family is scattered. Geoffrey, who was in the air force, is now with a top-flight company in Mexico. Diana and Pam are married and in London. Sylvia, now Mrs. Cyril Genesee, wife of the classical master at University School, is the only one living in Victoria. Her mother is happy to have her nearby.

"All of that story," said Constance, "constitutes just the highlights. The rest of it would fill a book!"

Trim and smart and youthful in appearance, she is much too busy with her daily living to write books.

"Besides," she adds, "I never could spell!"

Queen Charlotte Sound . . . the Island of Quadra and Vancouver."

With the loss of Spanish influence in the area after the Nootka Convention of 1795, the island was called Vancouver's Island and eventually by its present simpler name. Captain Quadra died in 1794.

But he was a seaman of great tradition, and this tradition is being carried on at HMCS Quadra, where hundreds of young Canadian hearts beat in unison every day, with many of them hoping to become the kind of seaman Captain Quadra was some two centuries ago.

By VICTOR D. HARRISON

My Uncle Victor had often mentioned the West Leech River Falls in recounting his hunting trips of the early 1900s. Their inaccessibility had until recently suppressed my desire to explore them. However, of late, I had learned that a private logging road, entered from Sooke and owned by Butler Bros., passes about one-half mile from the top of the falls.

With the firm's permission, I drove out one Saturday to explore and photograph the area.

After a walk through slash to the top of the falls, I got a panoramic view eastward of the slopes and gulleys of the Sooke hills. In order to get a closeup photo of the cataract, I decided to descend the steep right bank.

The shale-rock formation of the cliffside was a different terrain from what I had been accustomed to as a coast hunter and outdoorsman. On crossing a slope of splintered shale fragments, I began to slip and had I not let go of my camera to grab the branch of a tree with my right hand, would have plunged hundreds of feet into the rocky chasm below. I watched the camera hurtle out of sight, the sound of its descent enveloped in the roar of the falls.

With much greater caution, then, I inched down the precipitous bank, hoping by some miracle to find the camera undamaged. On reaching the river bed, all I could see of the falls was the third drop, an imposing sight in itself—a narrow ribbon of white foam, melting in the deep pool below. A sharp turn in the stream concealed the upper portions.

Scaling the left bank of the river, I found a flat circular bed at the base of the second drop, covered with logs and other driftwood—obviously a wide pool during the height of winter flood. Here was a spectacular view of the first and second cataracts of the West Leech, in its rugged grandeur a far more impressive sight than the waterfalls of either the Elk or Little Qualicum rivers.

It was evident that only the first plunge of the river could be seen from behind the high cliff on the east side or even from the top of the falls. It is the only part visible for many miles down across the lower Sooke hills. For two-thirds of the West Leech waterfall is a hidden beauty, revealed only to those hardy and willing enough to scale the cliffs guarding its secret.

Returning to my car, I drove down to the gatekeeper's cabin and told him that I would have to return to Victoria to get another camera. He kindly arranged to have the gate open for me that evening, for I had decided to camp overnight in order to get an early morning start. The falls, facing the eastern sun, would be best photographed in the forenoon.

That evening one more hindrance was yet to come. Before dark, I decided to take a drive on the logging road toward its Jordan River terminus. I stopped at the Bear Creek diversion reservoir where a car was parked. I found the driver was fishing. He had already obtained several good-sized trout.

After some conversation, I left him and headed back and after a bit more mountaineering, I obtained some fine snapshots of the West Leech River Falls.
